EDITORS' PREFACE

Our aims in this Edition of the poetry of Burns were outlined in the Preface to our First Volume. Now that our work is done, it may be meet to touch on them with a certain particularity.

(1.) One, the first, was a classic text; and this was only to be achieved by exhaustively collating all the available versions, whether printed or holograph. After careful inquiry and research access was got to such a mass of mss., including many not hitherto utilised, that this Centenary Edition may fairly claim to be regarded as a complete lexicon of the text of Burns's verse. Not only, in effect, is that text established and authenticated, but also a list is given of all important variations, with the authority for each. A mere rag-bag of anonymous and second-hand differences is a plain incitement to bewilderment and error. But an ordered and authenticated register supplies the sole means of testing the selected text, at the same time that it is of no small value as a guide to the Poet's methods.

(2.) For the exact and adequate understanding of the Bard we thought it right to give the history, so far as known, and the local setting of his every several piece, together with an explanation of his chief allusions—many among them of the most fleeting kind. In this connexion we hazarded the remark that Burns was 'what is called a local poet,' and that, to make sure of his being comprehended and appreciated, 'the safer as well as the more serviceable course' was rather 'to err on the score of too much commentary than on that of not enough.' The mere suggestion that the singer of Montgomerie's Peggy and the 'proper young belles' of Mauchline, the satirist of Auld and Fisher and Russell, the champion of Gavin Hamilton, the correspondent of Davie Sillar and Rankine and Lapraik—the Burns, in fact, who claimed with pride to be the peculiar Bard of Coila—was 'local' in any sense whatever, has given, it seems, unpardonable offence—not, of course, to the intelligent Scot, but—to certain Scotsmen who, it would appear, are bent on making Burns the pretext for and the buried treasure in a whole dust-yard, a sort of Harmony-Jail, of parochial 'fittons, figments, and leasings.' These have not scrupled, in accounting for our very necessary statement, to ascribe to us the most discreditable motives: so that we have even been accused of the deliberate design to jeap and belittle the Poet we were professing to illustrate. Again, one 'serious Burns student' has assured the world, or such of it as he could reach, that our 'gibes against the Poet's parochialism' have covered us with 'obloquy.' As matter of fact, no finer eulogy could be passed on Burns, no nobler tribute paid his gift, than is contained in the demonstration that, though 'the satirist and singer of a parish,' he appeals to 'a world-wide public': since he must of necessity command such an audience by virtue of intrinsic splendour and innate magnicence and in despite of local and peculiar accidents.

(3.) For the Southron reader, still more essential to the understanding of Burns was a full and sufficient glossary. This, for convenience, is made marginal—as it were a running translation of the text; but in the case of certain words the explanation is relegated to the Notes. In this volume there is added a complete Glossarial Index, which, by means of quotations, will guide the reader, it is hoped, to an exacter appreciation of meanings and shades of meaning than the isolated exhibition of a marginal equivalent could do. For divers references to English Poets in the Glossarial Index we are indebted to Mr. W. J. Craig, Editor of The Oxford Shakespeare.

(4.) We have done our utmost to define and determine the relations of Burns to the past: for the very sufficient reasons (a) that no great poet was ever more directly 'the product of immediate and remote forebears' than Burns, or more entirely and conspicuously the product of a certain school, and (b) that in him the school aforesaid culminated. Here, again, we have been credited with a desire to achieve the 'depreciation' of Burns, with an endeavour to lessen his position as 'a great lyric poet,' with the will to 'change his place in the estimation of the world.' To all which it is enough to reply that the worst unfriends to Burns and Burns's fame are those who would see the man other than he was and establish his reputation on a basis of falsehood. Facts, he said—

'Facts are chiels that winna ding
An' daurna be disputed';

and to qualify an honest attempt at the discovery and elucidation of facts as an insult to his memory is surely a culmination of burlesque in argument. A reputation falsely founded demoralises those who accept it for the living truth; for a man can never be rightly known nor properly understood till he is set in his true perspective, and the amount of his debt to his ancestors is more or less exactly estimated. In this thought we have spent our labour and our time. If we be mistaken, then so much the worse for us. But, unless we be mistaken, then so much the worse—not for Burns: whose qualities are immortal: but—for those who insist on reading him for merits which he has not, and on reverencing him for virtues to which he laid no claim.

MISCELLANEOUS SONGS

A RUINED FARMER

I

The sun he is sunk in the west,
All creatures retirèd to rest,
While here I sit, all sore beset
With sorrow, grief, and woe:
And it's O fickle Fortune, O!

II

The prosperous man is asleep,
Nor hears how the whirlwinds sweep;
But Misery and I must watch
The surly tempests blow:
And it's O fickle Fortune, O!

III

There lies the dear Partner of my breast,
Her cares for a moment at rest!
Must I see thee, my youthful pride,
Thus brought so very low?
And it's O fickle Fortune, O!

VOL. IV.
There lie my sweet babies in her arms;
No anxious fear their little hearts alarms;
But for their sake my heart does ache,
    With many a bitter throe:
And it's O fickle Fortune, O!

I once was by Fortune carest,
I once could relieve the distrest;
Now life's poor support, hardly earn'd,
    My fate will scarce bestow:
And it's O fickle Fortune, O!

No comfort, no comfort I have!
How welcome to me were the grave!
But then my wife and children dear—
    O, whither would they go!
And it's O fickle Fortune, O!

O, whither, O, whither shall I turn,
All friendless, forsaken, forlorn?
For in this world Rest or Peace
    I never more shall know:
And it's O fickle Fortune, O!
MONTGOMERIE'S PEGGY

I

Altho' my bed were in yon muir,
   Amang the heather, in my plaidie,
Yet happy, happy would I be,
   Had I my dear Montgomerie's Peggy.

II

When o'er the hill beat surly storms,
   And winter nights were dark and rainy,
I'd seek some dell, and in my arms
   I'd shelter dear Montgomerie's Peggy.

III

Were I a Baron proud and high,
   And horse and servants waiting ready,
Then a' 'twad gie o' joy to me—
   The sharin't with Montgomerie's Peggy.

THE LASS OF CESSNOCK BANKS

I

On Cessnock banks a lassie dwells,
   Could I describe her shape and mien!
Our lasses a' she far excels—
   An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!
II
She's sweeter than the morning dawn,
When rising Phœbus first is seen,
And dew-drops twinkle o'er the lawn—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

III
She's stately like yon youthful ash,
That grows the cowslip braes between,
And drinks the stream with vigour fresh—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

IV
She's spotless like the flow'ring thorn
With flow'rs so white and leaves so green,
When purest in the dewy morn—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

V
Her looks are like the vernal May,
When ev'ning Phœbus shines serene,
While birds rejoice on every spray—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

VI
Her hair is like the curling mist,
That climbs the mountain-sides at e'en,
When flow'r-reviving rains are past—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!
THE LASS OF CESSNOCK BANKS

vii
Her forehead's like the show'ry bow,
When gleaming sunbeams intervene,
And gild the distant mountain's brow—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

viii
Her cheeks are like yon crimson gem,
The pride of all the flowery scene,
Just opening on its thorny stem—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

ix
Her teeth are like the nightly snow,
When pale the morning rises keen,
While hid the murm'ring streamlets flow—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

x
Her lips are like yon cherries ripe,
That sunny walls from Boreas screen:
They tempt the taste and charm the sight—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

xi
Her teeth are like a flock of sheep
With fleeces newly washen clean,
That slowly mount the rising steep—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!
Her breath is like the fragrant breeze,
That gently stirs the blossom'd bean,
When Phoebus sinks behind the seas—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

Her voice is like the ev'n ing thrush,
That sings on Cessnock banks unseen,
While his mate sits nestling in the bush—
An' she has twa sparkling, rogueish een!

But it's not her air, her form, her face,
Tho' matching Beauty's fabled Queen:
'Tis the mind that shines in ev'ry grace—
An' chiefly in her rogueish een!

Tho' fickle Fortune has deceived me
(Sh e promis'd fair, and perform'd but ill),
Of mistress, friends, and wealth bereaved me,
Yet I bear a heart shall support me still.
RAGING FORTUNE

II
I'll act with prudence as far as I'm able;
    But if success I must never find,
Then come, Misfortune, I bid thee welcome—
    I'll meet thee with an undaunted mind!

RAGING FORTUNE

I
O, raging Fortune's withering blast
    Has laid my leaf full low!
O, raging Fortune's withering blast
    Has laid my leaf full low!

II
My stem was fair, my bud was green,
    My blossom sweet did blow;
The dew fell fresh, the sun rose mild,
    And made my branches grow.

III
But luckless Fortune's northern storms
    Laid a' my blossoms low!
But luckless Fortune's northern storms
    Laid a' my blossoms low!
MY FATHER WAS A FARMER

I

My father was a farmer upon the Carrick border, O,
And carefully he bred me in decency and order, O.
He bade me act a manly part, though I had ne’er a farthing, O,
For without an honest, manly heart no man was worth regarding, O.

II

Then out into the world my course I did determine, O:
Tho’ to be rich was not my wish, yet to be great was charming, O.
My talents they were not the worst, nor yet my education, O—
Resolv’d was I at least to try to mend my situation, O.

III

In many a way and vain essay I courted Fortune’s favour, O:
Some cause unseen still stept between to frustrate each endeavour, O.
Sometimes by foes I was o’erpowers’d, sometimes by friends forsaken, O,
And when my hope was at the top, I still was worst mistaken, O.
MY FATHER WAS A FARMER

iv

Then sore harass'd, and tir'd at last with Fortune's vain delusion, O,
I dropt my schemes like idle dreams, and came to this conclusion, O:—
The past was bad, and the future hid; its good or ill untried, O,
But the present hour was in my pow'r, and so I would enjoy it, O.

No help, nor hope, nor view had I, nor person to befriend me, O;
So I must toil, and sweat, and broil, and labour to sustain me, O!
To plough and sow, to reap and mow, my father bred me early, O:
For one, he said, to labour bred was a match for Fortune fairly, O.

vi

Thus all obscure, unknown, and poor, thro' life I'm doom'd to wander, O,
Till down my weary bones I lay in everlasting slumber, O.
No view nor care, but shun whate'er might breed me pain or sorrow, O,
I live to-day as well's I may, regardless of to-morrow, O!
But, cheerful still, I am as well as a monarch in a palace, O,
Tho' Fortune's frown still hunts me down, with all her wonted malice, O:
I make indeed my daily bread, but ne'er can make it farther, O,
But, as daily bread is all I need, I do not much regard her, O.

When sometimes by my labour I earn a little money, O,
Some unforeseen misfortune comes gen' rally upon me, O:
Mischance, mistake, or by neglect, or my good-natur'd folly, O—
But, come what will, I've sworn it still, I'll ne'er be melancholy, O.

All you who follow wealth and power with unremitting ardour, O,
The more in this you look for bliss, you leave your view the farther, O.
Had you the wealth Potosi boasts, or nations to adore you, O,
A cheerful, honest-hearted clown I will prefer before you, O!
O, LEAVE NOVELS

O, LEAVE NOVELS

I

O, leave novels, ye Mauchline belles—
Ye 're safer at your spinning-wheel!
Such witching books are baited hooks
For rakish rooks like Rob Mossgiel.

II

Your fine Tom Jones and Grandisons
They make your youthful fancies reel!
They heat your brains, and fire your veins,
And then you're prey for Rob Mossgiel.

III

Beware a tongue that's smoothly hung,
A heart that warmly seems to feel!
That feeling heart but acts a part—
'Tis rakish art in Rob Mossgiel.

IV

The frank address, the soft caress
Are worse than poisoned darts of steel:
The frank address and politesse
Are all finesse in Rob Mossgiel.
ONE NIGHT AS I DID WANDER

THE MAUCHLINE LADY

[Notes] When first I came to Stewart Kyle,
My mind it was na steady:
Where'er I gaed, where'er I rade,
A mistress still I had ay.

II

But when I came roun' by Mauchline toun,
Not dreadin anybody,
My heart was caught, before I thought,
And by a Mauchline lady.

ONE NIGHT AS I DID WANDER

One night as I did wander,
When corn begins to shoot,
I sat me down to ponder
Upon an auld tree-root:
Auld Ayr ran by before me,
And bicker'd to the seas;
A cushat crooded o'er me,
That echoed through the trees.
THERE WAS A LAD

Chorus

Robin was a rovin boy,
Rantin, rovin, rantin, rovin,
Robin was a rovin boy,
Rantin, rovin Robin!

I

There was a lad was born in Kyle,
But whatna day o' whatna style,
I doubt it's hardly worth the while
To be sae nice wi' Robin.

II

Our monarch's hindmost year but ane
Was five-and-twenty days begun,
'Twas then a blast o' Janwar' win'
Blew Hansel in on Robin.

III

The gossip keekit in his loof,
Quo' scho:—'Wha lives will see the proof,
This waly boy will be nae coof:
I think we'll ca' him Robin.
There was a Lad

IV

'There'll hae misfortunes great an' sma',
But ay a heart aboon them a'.
He'll be a credit till us a':
We'll a' be proud o' Robin!

V

'But sure as three times three mak nine,
I see by ilka score and line,
This chap will dearly like our kin',
So leeze me on thee, Robin!

VI

'Guid faith,' quo' scho, 'I doubt you, stir,
Ye gar the lasses lie aspar;
But twenty fauts ye may hae waur—
So blessins on thee, Robin!'

Chorus

Robin was a rovin boy,
Rantin, rovin, rantin, rovin,
Robin was a rovin boy,
Rantin, rovin Robin!
WILL YE GO TO THE INDIES, MY MARY

I
Will ye go to the Indies, my Mary,
And leave auld Scotia's shore?
Will ye go to the Indies, my Mary,
Across th' Atlantic roar?

II
O, sweet grows the lime and the orange,
And the apple on the pine;
But a' the charms o' the Indies
Can never equal thine.

III
I hae sworn by the Heavens to my Mary,
I hae sworn by the Heavens to be true,
And sae may the Heavens forget me,
When I forget my vow!

IV
O, plight me your faith, my Mary,
And plight me your lily-white hand!
O, plight me your faith, my Mary,
Before I leave Scotia's strand!
We hae plighted our troth, my Mary,
In mutual affection to join;
And curst be the cause that shall part us!
The hour and the moment o' time!

Her flowing locks, the raven's wing,
Adown her neck and bosom hing.
How sweet unto that breast to cling,
And round that neck entwine her!

Her lips are roses wat wi' dew—
O, what a feast, her bonie mou!
Her cheeks a mair celestial hue,
A crimson still diviner!

'Twas even: the dewy fields were green,
On every blade the pearls hang,
The zephyr wanton'd round the bean,
And bore its fragrant sweets alang,
In ev'ry glen the mavis sang,
All Nature list'ning seem'd the while,
Except where greenwood echoes rang
Amang the braes o' Ballochmyle.

With careless step I onward stray'd,
My heart rejoic'd in Nature's joy,
When, musing in a lonely glade,
A maiden fair I chanc'd to spy.
Her look was like the Morning's eye,
Her air like Nature's vernal smile.
Perfection whisper'd, passing by:—
'Behold the lass o' Ballochmyle!'

Fair is the morn in flowery May,
And sweet is night in autumn mild,
When roving thro' the garden gay,
Or wand'ring in the lonely wild;
But woman, Nature's darling child—
There all her charms she does compile!
Even there her other works are foil'd
By the bonie lass o' Ballochmyle.

O, had she been a country maid,
And I the happy country swain,
Tho' shelter'd in the lowest shed
That ever rose on Scotia's plain,
The night was still, and o'er the hill
The moon shone on the castle wa',
The mavis sang, while dew-drops hang Around her on the castle wa':

Sae merrily they danc'd the ring
Frac ecin' till the cock did craw,
And ay the o'erword o' the spring
Was:—‘Irvine's bairns are bonie a'!'
I

Ye sons of old Killie, assembled by Willie
To follow the noble vocation,
Your thrifty old mother has scarce such another
To sit in that honorèd station!
I've little to say, but only to pray
(As praying's the ton of your fashion).
A prayer from the Mûse you well may excuse
('Tis seldom her favourite passion):—

II

'Ye Powers who preside o'er the wind and the tide,
Who markèd each element's border,
Who formèd this frame with beneficent aim,
Whose sovereign statute is order,
Within this dear mansion may wayward Contention
Or witherèd Envy ne'er enter!
May Secrecy round be the mystical bound,
And brotherly Love be the centre!'
THE BONIE MOOR-HEN

Chorus

advise I rede you, beware at the hunting, young men!
I rede you, beware at the hunting, young men!
Take some on the wing, and some as they spring,
cautiously But cannily steal on a bonie moor-hen.

mown The heather was blooming, the meadows were mawn, went; one Our lads gaed a-hunting ae day at the dawn,
O'er moors and o'er mosses and monie a glen:
At length they discovered a bonie moor-hen.

II

Sweet-brushing the dew from the brown heather bells,
Her colours betray'd her on yon mossy fells!
Her plumage outlustred the pride o' the spring,
And O, as she wanton'd sae gay on the wing,

III

Auld Phœbus himsel', as he peep'd o'er the hill,
In spite at her plumage he tryèd his skill:
height He level'd his rays where she bask'd on the brae—
His rays were outshone, and but mark'd where she lay!
HERE'S A BOTTLE

iv

They hunted the valley, they hunted the hill,
The best of our lads wi' the best o' their skill;
But still as the fairest she sat in their sight,
Then, whirr! she was over, a mile at a flight.

Chorus

I rede you, beware at the hunting, young men!
I rede you, beware at the hunting, young men!
Take some on the wing, and some as they spring,
But cannily steal on a bonie moor-hen.

HERE'S A BOTTLE

There’s nane that’s best of human kind
But the cheerful and the gay, man.

Here’s a bottle and an honest man!
What wad ye wish for mair, man?
Wha kens, before his life may end,
What his share may be o’ care, man?

ii

Then catch the moments as they fly,
And use them as ye ought, man!
Believe me, Happiness is shy,
And comes not ay when sought, man!
THE BONIE LASS OF ALBANIE

I

sad; extremely

My heart is wae, and unco wae,
To think upon the raging sea,
That roars between her gardens green
An' the bonie lass of Albanie.

II

This noble maid's of royal blood,
That rulèd Albion's kingdoms three;
But O, alas for her bonie face!
They hae wrangled the lass of Albanie.

III

In the rolling tide of spreading Clyde
There sits an isle of high degree,
And a town of fame, whose princely name
Should grace the lass of Albernie.

[Notes]

IV

But there is a youth, a witless youth,
That fills the place where she should be
We'll send him o'er to his native shore,
And bring our ain sweet Albernie!

V

Alas the day, and woe the day!
A false usurper wan the gree,
Who now commands the towers and lands,
The royal right of Albernie.
We'll daily pray, we'll nightly pray,
On bended knees most fervently,
That the time may come, with pipe and drum
We'll welcome hame fair Albanie.

Amang the trees, where humming bees
At buds and flowers were hinging, O,
Auld Caledon drew out her drone,
And to her pipe was singing, O.
'Twas Pibroch, Sang, Strathspeys and Reels—
She dirl'd them aff fu' clearly, O,
When there cam' a yell o' foreign squeels,
That dang her tapsalteerie, O!

Their capon craws an' queer ' ha, ha's,'
They made our lugs grow eerie, O.
The hungry bike did scrape and fyke,
Till we were wae and weary, O.
But a royal ghaist, wha ance was cas'd
A prisoner aughteen year awa,
He fir'd a Fiddler in the North,
That dang them tapsalteerie, O!
THE CHEVALIER'S LAMENT

I
The small birds rejoice in the green leaves returning,
The murmuring streamlet winds clear thro' the vale,
The primroses blow in the dews of the morning,
And wild scatter'd cowslips bedeck the green dale:
But what can give pleasure, or what can seem fair,
When the lingering moments are number'd by care?
No flow'rs gaily springing,
Nor birds sweetly singing
Can soothe the sad bosom of joyless despair!

II
The deed that I dar'd, could it merit their malice,
A king and a father to place on his throne?
His right are these hills, and his right are those valleys,
Where the wild beasts find shelter, tho' I can find none!
But 'tis not my suff'ring thus wretched, forlorn—
My brave gallant friends, 'tis your ruin I mourn!
Your faith prov'd so loyal
In hot bloody trial,
Alas! can I make it no better return?
Ye monachs take the East and West
Frae Indus to Savannah:
Gie me within my straining grasp
The melting form of Anna!

There I'll despise Imperial charms,
An Empress or Sultana,
While dying raptures in her arms
I give and take wi' Anna!
YESTREEN I HAD A PINT O' WINE

v
Awa, thou flaunting God of Day!
Awa, thou pale Diana!

Ilk Star, gae hide thy twinkling ray,
When I'm to meet my Anna!

vi
Come, in thy raven plumage, Night
(Sun, Moon, and Stars, withdrawn a'),
And bring an Angel-pen to write
My transports with my Anna!

POSTSCRIPT

i
The Kirk an' State may join, and tell
To do sic things I maunna:
The Kirk an' State may gae to Hell,
And I'll gae to my Anna.

ii
She is the sunshine o' my e'e,
To live but her I canna:
Had I on earth but wishes three,
The first should be my Anna.
SWEET ARE THE BANKS

I
Sweet are the banks, the banks o’ Doon,
The spreading flowers are fair,
And everything is blythe and glad,
But I am fu’ o’ care.
Thou’l break my heart, thou bonie bird,
That sings upon the bough!
Thou minds me o’ the happy days
When my fause Luve was true.
Thou’l break my heart, thou bonie bird,
That sings beside thy mate,
For sae I sat, and sae I sang,
And wist na o’ my fate!

II
Aft hae I rov’d by bonie Doon,
To see the woodbine twine,
And ilka bird sang o’ its luve,
And sae did I o’ mine.
Wi’ lightsome heart I pu’d a rose
Upon its thorny tree,
But my fause luver staw my rose,
And left the thorn wi’ me.
Wi’ lightsome heart I pu’d a rose
Upon a morn in June,
And sae I flourish’d on the morn,
And sae was pu’d or noon.
YE FLOWERY BANKS

I
Ye flowery banks o' bonie Doon,
How can ye blume sae fair?
How can ye chant, ye little birds,
And I sae fu' o' care?

II
Thou'll break my heart, thou bonie bird,
That sings upon the bough:
Thou minds me o' the happy days
When my fause Luve was true!

III
Thou'll break my heart, thou bonie bird,
That sings beside thy mate:
For sae I sat, and sae I sang,
And wist na o' my fate!

IV
Aft hae I rov'd by bonie Doon
To see the woodbine twine,
And ilka bird sang o' its luve,
And sae did I o' mine.
CALEDONIA

v

Wi' lightsome heart I pu'd a rose
Frae aff its thorny tree,
And my fause luver staw my rose,
But left the thorn wi' me.

CALEDONIA

I

There was on a time, but old Time was then young,
That brave Caledonia, the chief of her line,
From some of your northern deities sprung
(Who knows not that brave Caledonia's divine?).
From Tweed to the Orcades was her domain,
To hunt, or to pasture, or do what she would.
Her heav'nly relations there fix'd her reign,
And pledged her their godheads to warrant it good.

II

A lambkin in peace but a lion in war,
The pride of her kindred the heroine grew.
Her grandsire, old Odin, triumphantly swore:—
'Whoe'er shall provoke thee, th' encounter shall rue!'
With tillage or pasture at times she would sport,
To feed her fair flocks by her green rustling corn;
But chiefly the woods were her fav'rite resort,
Her darling amusement the hounds and the horn.
III
Long quiet she reign'd, till thitherward steers
A flight of bold eagles from Adria's strand.
Repeated, successive, for many long years,
They darken'd the air, and they plunder'd the land.
Their pounces were murder, and horror their cry;
They'd conquer'd and ravag'd a world beside.
She took to her hills, and her arrows let fly—
The daring invaders, they fled or they died!

IV
[Notes] The Cameleon-Savage disturb'd her repose,
With tumult, disquiet, rebellion, and strife.
Provok'd beyond bearing, at last she arose,
And robbed him at once of his hopes and his life.
The Anglian Lion, the terror of France,
Oft, prowling, ensanguin'd the Tweed's silver flood;
But, taught by the bright Caledonian lance,
He learnèd to fear in his own native wood.

V
The fell Harpy-Raven took wing from the north,
The scourge of the seas, and the dread of the shore;
The wild Scandinavian Boar issued forth
To wanton in carnage and wallow in gore;
O'er countries and kingdoms their fury prevail'd,
No arts could appease them, no arms could repel;
But brave Caledonia in vain they assail'd,
[Notes] As Largs well can witness, and Loncartie tell.
Thus bold, independent, unconquer'd, and free,
   Her bright course of glory for ever shall run,
For brave Caledonia immortal must be,
   I'll prove it from Euclid as clear as the sun:—
Rectangle-triangle, the figure we'll chuse;
   The upright is Chance, and old Time is the base,
But brave Caledonia's the hypothenuse;
   Then, ergo, she'll match them, and match them always!

YOU'RE WELCOME, WILLIE STEWART

Chorus
You're welcome, Willie Stewart!
   You're welcome, Willie Stewart!
There's ne'er a flower that blooms in May,
   That's half sae welcome's thou art!

Come, bumpers high! express your joy!
   The bowl we maun renew it—
The tappet hen, gae bring her ben,
   To welcome Willie Stewart!
WHEN FIRST I SAW

II

May foes be strong, and friends be slack!
Ilk action, may he rue it!
May woman on him turn her back,
That wrangs thee, Willie Stewart!

Chorus

You're welcome, Willie Stewart!
You're welcome, Willie Stewart!
There's ne'er a flower that blooms in May,
That's half sae welcome's thou art!

Chorus

She's aye, aye sae blithe, sae gay,
She's aye sae blithe and cheerie,
She's aye sae bonie, blithe and gay,
O, gin I were her dearie!

1

When first I saw fair Jeanie's face,
I couldna tell what ail'd me:
My heartwent fluttering pit-a-pat,
My een they almost fail'd me.
WHEN FIRST I SAW

She's aye sae neat, sae trim, sae tight,
   All grace does round her hover!
Ae look depriv'd me o' my heart,
   And I became her lover.

II

Had I Dundas's whole estate,
     Or Hopetoun's wealth to shine in;
Did warlike laurels crown my brow,
     Or humbler bays entwining;
I'd lay them a' at Jeanie's feet,
     Could I but hope to move her,
And, prouder than a belted knight,
     I'd be my Jeanie's lover.

III

But sair I fear some happier swain,
     Has gain'd my Jeanie's favour.
If so, may every bliss be hers,
     Though I maun never have her!
But gang she east, or gang she west,
     'Twixt Forth and Tweed all over,
While men have eyes, or ears, or taste,
     She'll always find a lover.

Chorus
She's aye, aye sae blithe, sae gay,
           She's aye sae blithe and cheerie,
She's aye sae bonie, blithe and gay,
     O, gin I were her dearie!
BEHOLD THE HOUR

FIRST SET

I

Behold the hour, the boat, arrive!
My dearest Nancy, O, farewell!
Sever'd frae thee, can I survive,
Frac thee whom I hae lov'd sae well?

II

Endless and deep shall be my grief,
Nae ray of comfort shall I see,
But this most precious, dear belief,
That thou wilt still remember me.

III

Along the solitary shore,
Where flitting sea-fowl round me cry,
Across the rolling, dashing roar,
I'll westward turn my wistful eye.

IV

'Happy thou Indian grove,' I'll say,
'Where now my Nancy's path shall be!
While thro' your sweets she holds her way,
O, tell me, does she muse on me?'
HERE'S A HEALTH TO THEM THAT'S AWA

I

Here's a health to them that's awa,
Here's a health to them that's awa!
And wha winna wish guid luck to our cause,
     May never guid luck be their fa'!
It's guid to be merry and wise,
     It's guid to be honest and true,
It's guid to support Caledonia's cause
     And bide by the buff and the blue.

II

Here's a health to them that's awa,
Here's a health to them that's awa!
Here's a health to Charlie, the chief o' the clan,
     Altho' that his band be sma'!
May Liberty meet wi' success,
     May Prudence protect her frae evil!
May tyrants and Tyranny tine i' the mist
     And wander their way to the Devil!

III

Here's a health to them that's awa,
Here's a health to them that's awa!
Here's a health to Tammie, the Norlan' laddie,
     That lives at the lug o' the Law!
HERE'S A HEALTH

Here’s freedom to them that wad read,
Here’s freedom to them that would write!
There’s nane ever fear’d that the truth should be heard
But they whom the truth would indite!

iv

Here’s a health to them that’s awa,
An’ here’s to them that’s awa!
Here’s to Maitland and Wycombe! Let wha does na like ’em
Be built in a hole in the wa’!
Here’s timmer that’s red at the heart,
Here’s fruit that is sound at the core,
And may he that wad turn the buff and blue coat
Be turn’d to the back o’ the door!

v

Here’s a health to them that’s awa,
Here’s a health to them that’s awa!
Here’s Chieftain M’Leod, a chieftain worth gowd, Tho’ bred amang mountains o’ snaw!
Here’s friends on baith sides o’ the Firth,
And friends on baith sides o’ the Tweed,
And wha wad betray old Albion’s right,
May they never eat of her bread!
AH, CHLORIS

I
Ah, Chloris, since it may not be
That thou of love wilt hear,
If from the lover thou maun flee,
Yet let the friend be dear!

II
Altho' I love my Chloris mair
Than ever tongue could tell,
My passion I will ne'er declare—
I'll say, I wish thee well.

III
Tho' a' my daily care thou art,
And a' my nightly dream,
I'll hide the struggle in my heart,
And say it is esteem.

PRETTY PEG

I
As I gaed up by yon gate-end,
When day was waxin weary,
Wha did I meet come down the street
But pretty Peg, my dearie?
MEG O’ THE MILL

II

Her air so sweet, her shape complete,
    Wi’ nae proportion wanting—
The Queen of Love could never move
    Wi’ motion mair enchanting!

III

With linkèd hands we took the sands
    Down by yon winding river;
And O! that hour, and shady bow’r,
    Can I forget it? Never!

MEG O’ THE MILL

I

O, ken ye what Meg o’ the mill has gotten?
An’ ken ye what Meg o’ the mill has gotten?
She’s gotten a coof wi’ a claute o’ siller,
And broken the heart o’ the barley miller!

II

The miller was strappin, the miller was ruddy,
A heart like a lord, and a hue like a lady.
The laird was a widdifu’, bleerit knurl—
She’s left the guid fellow, and taen the churl!
PHILLIS THE FAIR

iii
The miller, he hecht her a heart leal and loving offered
The laird did address her wi' matter more moving:
A fine pacing-horse wi' a clear, chainèd bridle, bright
A whip by her side, and a bonie side saddle!

iv
O, wae on the siller—it is sae prevailing!
And wae on the love that is fixed on a mailen!
A tocher's nae word in a true lover's parl,
But gie me my love and a fig for the warl!

i
While larks with little wing
Fann'd the pure air,
Viewing the breathing Spring,
Forth I did fare.
Gay, the sun's golden eye
Peep'd o'er the mountains high;
'Such thy bloom,' did I cry—
'SPhillis the fair!'

ii
In each bird's careless song,
Glad, I did share;
While yon wild flowers among,
Chance led me there.
Sweet to the opening day,
Rosebuds bent the dewy spray;
'Such thy bloom,' did I say—
'Phillis the fair!'

Down in a shady walk
Doves cooing were;
I mark'd the cruel hawk
Caught in a snare.
So kind may Fortune be!
Such make his destiny,
He who would injure thee,
Phillis the fair!

O SAW YE MY DEAR, MY PHILLY

O, saw ye my Dear, my Philly?
O, saw ye my Dear, my Philly?
She's down i' the grove, she's wi' a new love,
She winna come hame to her Willy.

What says she my Dear, my Philly?
What says she my Dear, my Philly?
She lets thee to wit she has thee forgot,
And for ever disowns thee, her Willy.
'TWAS NA HER BONIE BLUE E’E 41

III

O, had I ne’er seen thee, my Philly!
O, had I ne’er seen thee, my Philly!
As light as the air, and fause as thou’s fair,
Thou’s broken the heart o’ thy Willy.

'TWAS NA HER BONIE BLUE E’E

I

'Twas na her bonie blue e’e was my ruin:
Fair tho’ she be, that was ne’er my undoin.
'Twas the dear smile when naebody did mind us,
'Twas the bewitching, sweet, stoun glance o’ kindness!

II

Sair do I fear that to hope is denied me,
Sair do I fear that despair maun abide me;
But tho’ fell Fortune should fate us to sever,
Queen shall she be in my bosom for ever.

III

Chloris, I ’m thine wi’ a passion sincerest,
And thou hast plighted me love o’ the dearest,
And thou ’rt the angel that never can alter—
Sooner the sun in his motion would falter!
WHY, WHY TELL THY LOVER

I

Why, why tell thy lover
Bliss he never must enjoy?
Why, why undeceive him,
And give all his hopes the lie?

II

O, why, while Fancy, raptur’d, slumbers, ‘Chloris, Chloris,’ all the theme,
Why, why wouldst thou, cruel,
Wake thy lover from his dream?

THE PRIMROSE

I

Dost ask me, why I send thee here
The firstling of the infant year:
This lovely native of the vale,
That hangs so pensive and so pale?

II

Look on its bending stalk, so weak,
That, each way yielding, doth not break,
And see how aptly it reveals
The doubts and fears a lover feels.
Look on its leaves of yellow hue
Bepearl'd thus with morning dew,
And these will whisper in thine ears:
'The sweets of loves are wash'd with tears.'

O, WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST

O, WERT thou in the cauld blast
On yonder lea, on yonder lea,
My plaidie to the angry airt,
I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee.
Or did Misfortune's bitter storms
Around thee blaw, around thee blaw,
Thy bield should be my bosom,
To share it a', to share it a'.

Or were I in the wildest waste,
Sae black and bare, sae black and bare,
The desert were a Paradise,
If thou wert there, if thou wert there.
Or were I monarch of the globe,
Wi' thee to reign, wi' thee to reign,
The brightest jewel in my crown
Wad be my queen, wad be my queen.
YOUR FRIENDSHIP

I
Your friendship much can make me blest—
O, why that bliss destroy?
Why urge the only, one request
You know I will deny?

II
Your thought, if Love must harbour there,
Conceal it in that thought,
Nor cause me from my bosom tear
The very friend I sought.

FOR THEE IS LAUGHING NATURE

For thee is laughing Nature gay,
For thee she pours the vernal day:
For me in vain is Nature drest,
While Joy's a stranger to my breast.

NO COLD APPROACH

No cold approach, no alter'd mien,
Just what would make suspicion start,
No pause the dire extremes between:
He made me blest—and broke my heart.
ALTHO' HE HAS LEFT ME

Altho' he has left me for greed o' the siller,
I dinna envy him the gains he can win:
I rather wad bear a' the lade o' my sorrow
Than ever hae acted sae faithless to him.

LET LOOVE SPARKLE

Let loove sparkle in her e'e,
Let her lo'e nae man but me:
That's the tocher guid I prize,
There the luver's treasure lies.

AS DOWN THE BURN

As down the burn they took their way,
And thro' the flowery dale;
His cheek to hers he aft did lay,
And love was ay the tale,
With :—'Mary, when shall we return,
Sic pleasure to renew?'
Quoth Mary :—'Love, I like the burn,
And ay shall follow you.'
ELEGY ON STELLA

IMPROBABLES

ON ROUGH ROADS

I'm now arriv'd—thanks to the Gods!—
Through pathways rough and muddy:
A certain sign that makin' roads
Is no this people's study.
Yet, though I'm no wi' scripture cramm'd,
I'm sure the Bible says
That heedless sinners shall be damn'd,
Unless they mend their ways.

ELEGY ON STELLA

I

Srait is the spot, and green the sod,
From whence my sorrows flow;
And soundly sleeps the ever dear
Inhabitant below.

II

Pardon my transport, gentle shade,
While o'er the turf I bow!
Thy earthly house is circumscrib'd,
And solitary now!
ELEGY ON STELLA

III
Not one poor stone to tell thy name
   Or make thy virtues known!
But what avails to thee—to me—
   The sculpture of a stone?

IV
I'll sit me down upon this turf,
   And wipe away this tear.
The chill blast passes swiftly by,
   And flits around thy bier.

V
Dark is the dwelling of the dead,
   And sad their house of rest:
Low lies the head by Death's cold arm
   In awful fold embraced.

VI
I saw the grim Avenger stand
   Incessant by thy side;
Unseen by thee, his deadly breath
   Thy lingering frame destroy'd.

Pale grew the roses on thy cheek,
   And wither'd was thy bloom,
Till the slow poison brought thy youth
   Untimely to the tomb.
ELEGY ON STELLA

viii

Thus wasted are the ranks of men—
Youth, health, and beauty fall!
The ruthless ruin spreads around,
And overwhels us all.

ix

Behold where, round thy narrow house,
The graves unnumber'd lie!
The multitude, that sleep below,
Existed but to die.

Some with the tottering steps of Age
Trod down the darksome way;
And some in Youth's lamented prime,
Like thee, were torn away.

xi

Yet these, however hard their fate,
Their native earth receives:
Amid their weeping friends they died,
And fill their fathers' graves.

xii

From thy lov'd friends, when first thy heart,
Was taught by Heaven to glow,
Far, far remov'd, the ruthless stroke
Surpris'd, and laid thee low.
ELEGY ON STELLA

xiii
At the last limits of our Isle,
   Wash'd by the western wave,
Touch'd by thy fate, a thoughtful Bard
   Sits lonely on thy grave!

xiv
Pensive he eyes, before him spread,
   The deep, outstretch'd and vast.
His mourning notes are borne away
   Along the rapid blast.

xv
And while, amid the silent dead,
   Thy hapless fate he mourns,
His own long sorrows freshly bleed,
   And all his grief returns.

xvi
Like thee, cut off in early youth
   And flower of beauty's pride,
His friend, his first and only joy,
   His much-lov'd Stella died.

xvii
Him, too, the stern impulse of Fate
   Resistless bears along,
And the same rapid tide shall whelm
   The Poet and the Song.
The tear of pity, which he shed,
He asks not to receive:
Let but his poor remains be laid
Obscurely in the grave!

His grief-worn heart with truest joy
Shall meet the welcome shock;
His airy harp shall lie unstrung
And silent on the rock.

O my dear maid, my Stella, when Shall this sick period close,
And lead the solitary Bard
To his belov'd repose?

Hail, Poesie! thou Nymph reserv'd!
In chase o' thee, what crowds haec swerv'd
POEM ON PASTORAL POETRY

Frae common sense, or sunk enerv'd
'Mang heaps o' clavers!
And och! o'er aft thy joes hae starv'd
'Mid a' thy favours!

II

Say, Lassie, why thy train amang,
While loud the trump's heroic clang,
And sock or buskin skelp alang
To death or marriage,
Scarce ane has tried the shepherd-sang
But wi' miscarriage?

In Homer's craft Jock Milton thrives;
Eschylus' pen Will Shakespeare drives;
Wee Pope, the knurlin, till him rives
Horatian fame;
In thy sweet sang, Barbauld, survives
Even Sappho's flame!

IV

But thee, Theocritus, wha matches?
They 're no herd's ballats, Maro's catches!
Squire Pope but busks his skinklin patches
O' heathen tatters!
I pass by hunders, nameless wretches,
That ape their betters.
In this braw age o’ wit and lear,
Will nane the Shepherd’s whistle mair
Blaw sweetly in its native air
    And rural grace,
And wi’ the far-fam’d Grecian share
    A rival place?

Yes! there is ane—a Scottish callan!
There’s ane! Come forrit, honest Allan!
Thou need na jouk behint the hallan,
    A chiel sae clever!

The teeth o’ Time may gnaw Tantallan,
    But thou’s for ever.

Thou paints auld Nature to the nines
In thy sweet Caledonian lines!
Nae gowden stream thro’ myrtles twines,
    Where Philomel,
While nightly breezes sweep the vines,
    Her griefs will tell:

In gowany glens thy burnie strays,
Where bonie lasses bleach their claes,
DRUMLANRIG WOODS

Or trots by hazelly shaws and braes
Wi' hawthorns gray,
Where blackbirds join the shepherd's lays
At close o' day.

IX

Thy rural loves are Nature's sel':
Nae bombast spates o' nonsense, swell,
Nae snap conceits, but that sweet spell
O' witchin love,
That charm that can the strongest quell,
The sternest move.

ON THE DESTRUCTION OF DRUMLANRIG WOODS

As on the banks of winding Nith
Ae smiling simmer morn I stray'd,
And traced its bonie holms and haughs,
Where linties sang, and lammies play'd,
I sat me down upon a craig,
And drank my fill o' fancy's dream,
When from the eddying deep below
Up rose the Genius of the Stream.
Dark like the frowning rock his brow,
   And troubled like his wintry wave,
   And deep as sighs the boding wind
   Amang his caves the sigh he gave.
   'And come ye here, my son,' he cried,
   'To wander in my birken shade?
To muse some favourite Scottish theme,
   Or sing some favourite Scottish maid?

'There was a time, it's nae lang syne,
   Ye might hae seen me in my pride,
When a' my banks sae bravely saw
   Their woody pictures in my tide;
When hanging beech and spreading elm
   Shaded my stream sae clear and cool;
And stately oaks their twisted arms
   Threw broad and dark across the pool;

'When, glinting thro' the trees, appear'd
   The wee white cot aboon the mill,
And peaceful rose its ingle reek,
   That, slowly curling, clamb the hill.
But now the cot is bare and cauld,
   Its leafy bield for ever gane,
And scarce a stinted birk is left
   To shiver in the blast its lane.'
'Alas!' quoth I, 'what ruefu' chance Has twin'd ye o' your stately trees? deprived Has laid your rocky bosom bare? clothing; slopes Has stripp'd the cleeding aff your braes? slopes Was it the bitter eastern blast, clothing; slopes That scatters blight in early spring? lightning Or was't the wil'fire scorch'd their boughs? Or canker-worm wi' secret sting?'

'Nae eastlin blast,' the Sprite replied— eastern 'It blaws na here sae fierce and fell, And on my dry and halesome banks Nae canker-worms get leave to dwell: Man! cruel man!' the Genius sigh'd, As through the cliffs he sank him down: 'The worm that gnaw'd my bonie trees, That reptile wears a Ducal crown.'

I MARRIED with a scolding wife The fourteenth of November: She made me weary of my life By one unruly member.
THE JOYFUL WIDOWER

Long did I bear the heavy yoke,
    And many griefs attended,
But to my comfort be it spoke,
    Now, now her life is ended!

II

We liv'd full one-and-twenty years
    A man and wife together.
At length from me her course she steer'd
    And gone I know not whither.
Would I could guess, I do profess:
    I speak, and do not flatter,
Of all the women in the world,
    I never would come at her!

III

Her body is bestow'd well—
    A handsome grave does hide her.
But sure her soul is not in Hell—
    The Deil would ne'er abide her!
I rather think she is aloft
    And imitating thunder,
For why?—Methinks I hear her voice
    Tearing the clouds asunder!
WHY SHOULD WE IDLY WASTE
OUR PRIME

I
Why should we idly waste our prime
   Repeating our oppressions?
Come rouse to arms! 'Tis now the time
   To punish past transgressions.
'Tis said that Kings can do no wrong—
   Their murderous deeds deny it,
And, since from us their power is sprung,
   We have a right to try it.
Now each true patriot's song shall be:—
   'Welcome Death or Libertie!'

II
Proud Priests and Bishops we'll translate
   And canonize as Martyrs;
The guillotine on Peers shall wait;
   And Knights shall hang in garters.
Those Despots long have trode us down,
   And Judges are their engines:
Such wretched minions of a Crown
   Demand the people's vengeance!
To-day 'tis theirs. To-morrow we Shall don the Cap of Libertie!
THE TREE OF LIBERTY

III

The Golden Age we'll then revive:
Each man will be a brother;
In harmony we all shall live,
And share the earth together;
In Virtue train'd, enlighten'd Youth
Will love each fellow-creature;
And future years shall prove the truth
That Man is good by nature:
Then let us toast with three times three
The reign of Peace and Libertie!

THE TREE OF LIBERTY

I

Heard ye o' the Tree o' France,
And wat ye what's the name o' t'?
Around it a' the patriots dance—
Weel Europe kens the fame o' t'!
It stands where ance the Bastile stood—
A prison built by kings, man,
When Superstition's hellish brood
Kept France in leading-strings, man.
II

Upo' this tree there grows sic fruit, such
   Its virtues a' can tell, man:
It raises man aboon the brute, above
   It mak's him ken himsel', man!
Gif ance the peasant taste a bit, If He's greater than a lord, man,
And wi' the beggar shares a mite
   O' a' he can afford, man.

III

This fruit is worth a' Afric's wealth:
   To comfort us 'twas sent, man,
To gie the sweetest blush o' health,
   And mak' us a' content, man!
It clears the een, it cheers the heart,
   Mak's high and low guid friends, man,
And he wha acts the traitor's part,
   It to perdition sends, man.

IV

My blessings ay attend the chiel, fellow
   Wha pitied Gallia's slaves, man,
And stav a branch, spite o' the Deil,
   Frac 'yont the western waves, man!
Fair Virtue water'd it wi' care,
   And now she sees wi' pride, man,
How weel it buds and blossoms there,
   Its branches spreading wide, man.
But vicious folk ay hate to see
The works o' Virtue thrive, man:
The courtly vermin's bann'd the tree,
And grat to see it thrive, man!

King Louis thought to cut it down,
When it was unco sma', man;
For this the watchman crack'd his crown,
Cut aff his head and a', man.

A wicked crew syne, on a time,
Did tak' a solemn aith, man,
It ne'er should flourish to its prime—
I wat they pledg'd their faith, man!

Awa they gaed wi' mock parade,
Like beagles hunting game, man,
But soon grew weary o' the trade,
And wish'd they'd been at hame, man.

Fair Freedom, standing by the tree,
Her sons did loudly ca', man.
She sang a sang o' Liberty,
Which pleas'd them ane and a', man.

By her inspir'd, the new-born race
Soon drew the avenging steel, man.
The hirelings ran—her foes gied chase,
And bang'd the despot weel, man.
viii

Let Britain boast her hardy oak,
   Her poplar, and her pine, man!
Auld Britain ance could crack her joke,
   And o' er her neighbours shine, man!
But seek the forest round and round,
   And soon 'twill be agreed, man,
That sic a tree can not be found
   'Twixt London and the Tweed, man.

 ix

Without this tree alake this life
   Is but a vale o' woe, man,
A scene o' sorrow mix'd wi' strife,
   Nae real joys we know, man;
We labour soon, we labour late,
   To feed the titled knave, man,
And a' the comfort we 're to get,
   Is that ayont the grave, man. beyond

 x

Wi' plenty o' sic trees, I trow,
   The warld would live in peace, man.
The sword would help to mak' a plough,
   The din o' war wad cease, man.
Like brethren in a common cause,
   We 'd on each other smile, man;
And equal rights and equal laws
   Wad gladden every isle, man.
XI
Woe befall the fellow
Wae worth the loon wha wadna eat
Sic halesome, dainty cheer, man!
I'd gie the shoon frae aff my feet,
To taste the fruit o't here, man!

Then
Syne let us pray, Auld England may
Sure plant this far-famed tree, man;
And blythe we'll sing, and herald the day
That gives us liberty, man.

I
Humid seal of soft affections,
Tend'rest pledge of future bliss,
Dearest tie of young connections,
Love's first snow-drop, virgin kiss!

II
Speaking silence, dumb confession,
Passion's birth and infant's play,
Dove-like fondness, chaste confession,
Glowing dawn of brighter day!

III
Sorrowing joy, adieu's last action,
Ling'ring lips—no more must join!
Words can never speak affection,
Thrilling and sincere as thine!
DELIA

AN ODE

I
Fair the face of orient day,
   Fair the tints of op'ning rose:
But fairer still my Delia dawns,
   More lovely far her beauty blows.

II
Sweet the lark's wild-warbled lay,
   Sweet the tinkling rill to hear:
But, Delia, more delightful still Steal thine accents on mine ear.

III
The flower-enamoured busy bee
   The rosy banquet loves to sip;
Sweet the streamlet's limpid lapse
   To the sun-brown'd Arab's lip:

IV
But, Delia, on thy balmy lips
   Let me, no vagrant insect, rove!
O, let me steal one liquid kiss!
   For O! my soul is parch'd with love!
TO THE OWL

I
Sad bird of night, what sorrow calls thee forth,
To vent thy plaints thus in the midnight hour?
Is it some blast that gathers in the north,
Threat'ning to nip the verdure of thy bow'r?

II
Is it, sad owl, that Autumn strips the shade,
And leaves thee here, unshelter'd and forlorn?
Or fear that Winter will thy nest invade?
Or friendless Melancholy bids thee mourn?

III
Shut out, lone bird, from all the feather'd train,
To tell thy sorrows to th' unheeding gloom,
No friend to pity when thou dost complain,
Grief all thy thought, and solitude thy home,

IV
Sing on, sad mourner! I will bless thy strain,
And pleas'd in sorrow listen to thy song.
Sing on, sad mourner! To the night complain,
While the lone echo wafts thy notes along.

V
Is Beauty less, when down the glowing cheek
Sad, piteous tears in native sorrows fall?
Less kind the heart when anguish bids it break?
Less happy he who lists to Pity's call?

VI
Ah no, sad owl! nor is thy voice less sweet,
That Sadness tunes it, and that Grief is there?
That Spring's gay notes, unskill'd, thou can't repeat,
That Sorrow bids thee to the gloom repair!

Nor that the treble songsters of the day,
Are quite estranged, sad bird of night, from thee!
Nor that the thrush deserts the evening spray,
When darkness calls thee from thy reverie!

VIII
From some old tower, thy melancholy dome,
While the gray walls and desert solitudes
Return each note, responsive to the gloom
Of ivied coverts and surrounding woods:

IX
There hooting, I will list more pleased to thee,
Than ever lover to the nightingale,
Or drooping wretch, oppress'd with misery,
Lending his ear to some condoling tale!
'Twas where the birch and sounding thong are ply'd,
The noisy domicile of pedant pride;
Where Ignorance her darkening vapour throws,
And Cruelty directs the thickening blows!
Upon a time, Sir A B C the great,
In all his pedagogic powers elate,
His awful chair of state resolves to mount,
And call the trembling Vowels to account.

First enter'd A, a grave, broad, solemn wight,
But, ah! deform'd, dishonest to the sight!
His twisted head look'd backward on his way,
And flagrant from the scourge he grunted, ai!

Reluctant, E stalk'd in; a piteous case,
The justling tears ran down his honest face!
That name, that well-worn name, and all his own,
Pale, he surrenders at the tyrant's throne!
The Pedant stifles keen the Roman sound
Not all his mongrel diphthongs can compound;
And next the title following close behind,
He to the nameless, ghastly wretch assign'd.

The cobwebb'd gothic dome resounded, Y!
In sullen vengeance, I disdain'd reply:
The Pedant swung his felon cudgel round,
And knock'd the groaning vowel to the ground!
ILLNESS OF A FAVOURITE CHILD

In rueful apprehension enter'd O,
The wailing minstrel of despairing woe:
Th' Inquisitor of Spain the most expert,
Might there have learnt new mysteries of his art.
So grim, deform'd, with horrors entering, U
His dearest friend and brother scarcely knew!

As trembling U stood staring all aghast,
The Pedant in his left hand clutch'd him fast,
In helpless infants' tears he dipp'd his right,
Baptiz'd him eu, and kick'd him from his sight.

I
Now health forsakes that angel face.
    Nae mair my dearie smiles.
Pale sickness withers ilka grace,
    And a' my hopes beguiles.

II
The cruel Powers reject the prayer
    I hourly mak' for thee:
Ye Heavens! how great is my despair!
    How can I see him die!
ON THE DEATH OF A FAVOURITE CHILD

I

O, sweet be thy sleep in the land of the grave,
   My dear little angel, for ever!
For ever?—O no! let not man be a slave,
   His hopes from existence to sever!

II

Though cold be the clay, where thou pillow'st thy head
   In the dark, silent mansions of sorrow,
The spring shall return to thy low, narrow bed,
   Like the beam of the day-star to-morrow.

III

The flower-stem shall bloom like thy sweet seraph form
   Ere the spoiler had nipt thee in blossom,
When thou shrank frae the scowl of the loud winter storm,
   And nestled thee close to that bosom,
DEATH OF A FAVOURITE CHILD 69

iv
O, still I behold thee, all lovely in death,
    Reclined on the lap of thy mother,
When the tear-trickle bright, when the short stifled breath
Told how dear ye were ay to each other.

v
My child, thou art gone to the home of thy rest,
    Where suffering no longer can harm thee:
Where the songs of the Good, where the hymns of the Blest
Through an endless existence shall charm thee!

vi
While he, thy fond parent, must sighing sojourn
    Through the dire desert regions of sorrow,
O'er the hope and misfortune of being to mourn,
    And sigh for this life's latest morrow.

ADDENDUM TO MALLY'S MEEK
Her yellow hair, beyond compare,
    Comes tumbling down her swan-white neck,
And her twa eyes, like stars in skies,
    Would keep a sinking ship frae wreck!

More than half the verse of Burns was published posthumously; more than a third of it without his sanction. He was especially 'unthrifty of his sweets': bestowing them on all and sundry, as if he had been denied the privilege of publication in any other form. Much of his work was in the strictest sense occasional: written 'by way of vive la bagatelle' on window-panes, in albums, in volumes, in letters to friends. He never dreamed, or not until the very last, that the world would cherish any curiosity about these fugitives; and death came to him ere the chance of sifting gold from dross in a final Edition. Thus, his unrealised estate (so to speak) was not only of peculiar bulk: it was also of many qualities, and it was variously dispersed among a crowd of owners; so that he provided the gull with no defence against the gull-catcher—he left the credulous wholly unarmed and unprepared against the contrivances of them that would deceive.

Again, he was accustomed to jot down from recitation, or to copy from letters, or from odd volumes, such lines, such stanzas, or such whole pieces as took his fancy; and more often than not he left his sources undenoted. Withal, he would despatch songs got in this way—with or without retouches—for publication, especially in Johnson's Museum; and, inasmuch as he signed not all those envoy's which were his own, the task of separating false from true is one of very considerable difficulty. Often the probabilities are our only guides; and in these cases we have summarised the evidence, and taken that direction in which the balance seemed to incline. In others, any sort of evidence is of the scantest; and what there is has been made scantier still by the carelessness—or the romantic humour, to call it by no worse a name—of such Editors as Allan Cunningham, Hogg and Motherwell, and Robert Chambers. The chief exemplar in the other sense is certainly Scott Douglas: who, though he seems to have prepared himself for the work of editing Burns by resolutely declining to read any one else, was zealous in his quest of ms. authorities, and, had he known something of literature, and been less given to putting on what Mr. Swinburne calls ‘a foolish face of praise’ over any and every thing his author wrote, might have gone far to establish a sound tradition in the matter of text. But such a tradition was scarce indicated ere it succumbed to sentimentalism and pretence; the old, hap-hazard, irresponsible convention still holds its own; and Editions professing to give the ‘complete text,’ the ‘true text,’ the ‘best text,’ and the like, continue to be issued, which set forth an abundance of proof that they are based,—some wholly, all mainly—on the battered, jogy trot hack-authorities of the prime.

Certain pieces in our present Volume are described as ‘Improbables.’ In our judgment, few or none of them can justly be credited to Burns; and to consider the quality of nearly all is to perceive, and very clearly, that, partial as his Editors were to the use of such epithets as ‘God-gifted,’ and ‘heaven-inspired,’ and the like, there was no rubbish so poor but they found it good enough to father on the god of their idolatry. As regards ascriptions known for spurious, it will suffice to refer to the more notable among them in this place. The song, Farewell to Ayrshire, published in Johnson’s Museum [No. 517: ‘Written by R. Burns’], and beginning, ‘Scenes of Woe and Scenes of Pleasure,’ is recognised for the work of Robert Gall (1776-1801). Gall, too, is responsible for Now Bank and Brae, an unsigned number in Johnson (No. 521), which, because it celebrates the ‘bonny blink o’ Mary’s e’e,’ Editor after Editor has persisted in regarding as a tribute to Mary Campbell. Two other songs, with 'Mary' as the heroine—Powers Celestial [alternative words to No. 460 in Johnson; Unsigned] and Could Aught of Song [No. 493 in Johnson: 'Written for this work by R. Burns']—were sent by R. Burns to the Museum, as the holographs in the Hastie Collection show; but both must have been transcribed by R. Burns from an Edinburgh Magazine for 1774. Yet a fourth on the same distracting theme, entitled, Burns's Lament for Mary, and beginning, 'O'er the Mist-Clouded Cliffs of the Lone Mountains Straying,' was scandalously ascribed to Burns by its real author, one John Burtt, schoolmaster in Kilmarnock, who sent it to The Ayr Advertiser in 1814. Again, the thing called Evan Banks, published in Johnson [No. 500: 'Written for this work by Robert Burns'] and also in the first Currie (1800), but omitted from the second and later Editions, was written by Helen Maria Williams, who appears to have communicated it to Burns for insertion in the Museum. Other numbers in Johnson foisted on the Bard are Will Ye Go and Mary, Katie (No. 459), which is found in The Charmer (1782) and other books, and on which Burns made a few verbal changes; The Auld Man, He Cam O'er the Lea (No. 416); and a set of Galla Water (No. 125) originally published in Herd (1776) of which Burns changed but two lines:—(1) 'I aften kiss her till I'm wearie,' to 'The mair I kiss she's ay my deary'; and (2) 'That gar'd her greet till she was weary,' to 'That cost her mony a blirt and blearie.' The fragment, Leezie Lindsay, in Johnson (No. 434), was communicated by Burns; but although he described it as old, and promised additions which he never wrote, he has been credited, not only with the antique itself but also, with the several modern versions. Another false get, Sheiluh O'Neil, first laid at his door in one of the tracts 'printed by Chapman and Lang for Stewart and Meikle,' and included in Cunningham (1834) and other Editions, is the brat of Sir Alexander Boswell. Then, *To Thee, Lov'd Nith, published in Cromek’s Reliques (1808), was written by Maria Riddell; while The Merry Ploughman:

‘As I was wand’ring ae morning in Spring,
I heard a young ploughman sae sweetly to sing;
And as he was singing these words he did say,
There’s nae life like the ploughman’s in the month o’
sweet May,’ etc.:—

though found by Cromek in Burns’s hand, and therefore published in the Reliques (whence it has crept—and still continues creeping—into Edition after Edition), is part of an old stall-ballad, The Ploughman’s Glory, which we have found in two different Edinburgh chaps, of 1776 and 1778 respectively. Last of all, a second set of My Nanie, O (see Vol. i. p. 413):

‘Red rolls the Nith ’tween bank and brae,
Mirk is the night and rainie,’ etc.:—

which found its way into Richards and Co.’s Edition (1821), has ‘Romantic Movement’ writ large all over it, and is now claimed for Allan Cunningham.

Several fragments published by Cunningham (1834), and still included in Editions of repute, are mere excerpts from The Merry Muses, torn from their context, and beggared of piquancy and significance; others, as Donald Brodie, are demonstrably not the work of Burns at all. Songs, too, from the same precious collection, with other indecent rhymes by Burns, have been ingeniously, but disingenuously, ‘purified’ for many Editions. But in this of ours the rule has been to print verbatim or not at all.

Among pieces other than lyrical, let it suffice to name the Epitaph on the Poet’s Daughter, ‘Here Lies a Rose, a Blooming Rose,’ etc., which Burns, if it were found in his hand, must have copied from Shenstone; Before I Saw Clarinda’s Face and The Hermit of Aberfeldy, both communicated to Hogg and Motherwell’s Edition by Peter Buchan, and both the work of a very humble poetaster, whether Buchan or another; the lines, To My Bed, which were published in Chambers (1838), and had already appeared in The Gentleman's Magazine for May 1759, as well as in The Muses' Mirror (1783); and the ballad, Katherine Jaffray (Aldine Edition, 1834, from a Burns holograph), which is found in the Herd ms. For spurious additions to genuine numbers, see our several Prefatory Notes.

With reference to the verses on The Duchess of Gordon's Reel Dancing, published in our Second Volume, p. 61, it has been pointed out that Burns repudiated their authorship in a letter to The Star, dated April 13th. But, in estimating the worth of his repudiation, there are important facts to consider. (1) He affirmed that he himself had not seen the copy of The Star containing these particular verses, and knew no more of the matter than what a friend of his ‘from having slightly glanced over the paper could recollect.’ (2) The verses—whether his or not—having been published without his sanction, he might think himself—as in less urgent circumstances others, including Sir Walter, have thought themselves—warranted in doing his utmost, even to the extent of flat denial, to disassociate himself from them. For their publication, not only was totally unauthorised by him but also, was calculated to injure his prospects. But (3) Peter Stuart, the Editor of The Star, carefully refrained—a notable circumstance—either from apologising to Burns or from accepting his repudiation. He stood utterly neutral: — ‘The Printer,’ he wrote, ‘feels himself exceedingly proud of the receipt of the following letter of a very ingenious Poet, whose productions were the delight and admiration of every reader of taste. The Printer believes that the best mode of answering the author’s intention is by publication of his sentiments on a subject which appears interesting to his reputation.’ (4) Besides the communication in The Star, Burns sent a private note to Peter Stuart, in which he, not only begged the insertion of the public letter as a favour but also, offered to make insertion worth Stuart’s while. This is shown by (a) an Editorial Note at the foot of the letter:—"The Printer has the happiness of flattering himself with an assurance of the future correspondence of Mr. Burns, the sublime flights and inspiration of whose muse must raise the reputation of the first print"; and by (b) part of a letter to Alexander Cunningham, first published by us in Vol. i. p. 447:—"So sent them to Stuart as a bribe," etc. (5) The rhymes we attribute to Burns might very well have been written in a drunken moment—he was sometimes partly oblivious, as he confessed, of stuff produced in such circumstances; they do him no discredit either as man or as poet; whilst certain others jocularly attributed to him in The Star, and probably concocted in the office, are mere caricature, and are plainly meant to be no more. (6) The fact that to The Star he had meanwhile sent an anonymous ode On the Defeated Regency Bill (Vol. ii. p. 159), may have given him some uneasiness, for that piece was despatched before he knew of the appearance of the lampoon on the Duchess of Gordon—not after, as we had believed; but in any case, on the supposition that the lampoon was a forgery, he adopted a strangely timid attitude towards the offending print. (7) Although he might not have known, when he wrote to The Star, that it was the first to print the lampoon, and was in fact the fons et origo of the whole 'calumny,' he must soon afterwards have learned as much from a note in reply to a letter of his in The London Gazeteer; but, instead of showing any resentment, he remained on the friendliest terms with Stuart while The Star existed. (8) There is no evidence of further intercourse between him and the Duchess of Gordon.

The chief 'calumny,' in fact, was the original statement in The Star (27th March 1789), that Burns, 'the ploughing poet,' had 'made this elegant stanza' on the Duchess of Gordon's appearance at an Edinburgh ball:—

'She was the meeklest of them aw,
Like Saul she stood the Tribes aboo'n;
Her goon was whiter than the snow,
Her face was redder than the moon.'
This lampoon (in which, by the way, the ‘aw’ for ‘a’ of the first line is pure Anglo-Scots) was copied into The London Gazetteer of the 28th March. There Burns read it, and thereupon he (10th April) sent the Editor of that print an indignant denial of its ascription to himself. The Editor referred him to ‘the Printer of The Star,’ from which journal the stanza was literally copied into the Gazetteer; and further, pretended to inform him that the Duchess of Gordon, ‘with much difficulty,’ and ‘by the industry and penetration of Lord Fife,’ had already discovered that the author of the jeu d’esprit was, not the ploughing poet but, the ‘Right Honourable the Treasurer of the Navy’ (i.e. Harry Dundas). How the Duchess came to communicate her discovery to an Editor still so inimical as to affirm the lines to be ‘certainly not so dull as Mr. Burns insinuates’ was (naturally) left in darkness: the whole thing being (in fact) an elaborate pleasantry at the expense of (a) Dundas and (b) Her Grace of Gordon. Dundas’s strong northern accent, and the ‘Scotticisms with which his speeches abounded,’ are said by Wraxall to have had a strangely ludicrous effect; and his diction is imitated in The Rolliad in a mock Probationary Ode for the laureateship:—

‘Hoot! hoot awaw!
Hoot! hoot awaw!
Ye lawland Bards! Who are ye aw?
What are your sanga! What aw your lair to boot?
Vain are your thoughts the prize to win,
Sae dight your gobs, and stint your senseless din.
Hoot hoot awaw! hoot! hoot!’ etc.:—

the author of which was quite clever enough to have written the original Anglo-Scots lampoon in The Star. Another point in the Gazetteer joke lay in the veiled, but notorious, jealousy between Dundas and the Duchess of each other’s influence with Pitt. But if, as has been argued (with immense solemnity), Dundas did really concoct the libel, and did really send it to an Opposition print, how could a scandal of such enormity sink so entirely into oblivion that only now was it recoverable in the interests of a down-trodden Bard! In truth, the business is a mare's nest of the first magnitude: one so monstrous large, indeed, that we feel constrained to apologise for abolishing a perennial joy to the simple, happy Common Burnsite, by stating, in so many words, what it is. We should have refrained from pricking the bubble, but for the fact that a poor, dead party jest has been used to prop the very grandiloquent theory that Pitt's Naval Treasurer cherished so intimate an enmity against a certain Miraculous Would-Be Exciseman, that, being himself a Tory and a Minister, he seduced a friend of the Would-Be Exciseman's, who was also Editor of an Opposition print, into a conspiracy designed (1) to hold the Duchess of Gordon and the Miraculous Would-Be up to public ridicule; (2) to embroil the Miraculous etc. with the Duchess of Gordon; and (3) to degrade the Duchess of Gordon in the sight of the Prime Minister, to the end that he would no more tolerate her approach!

In sober earnest, the case is thus resumed:—(1) 'If the Gordon pasquil was really written by "the great dispenser of patronage in Scotland," it must be regarded as indicating the reverse of respect for the character of Burns, who is represented as the "ploughing poet," fond of women and whisky'—(which, as we know, he was not)—'and capable of ridiculing a patroness in verse'—(which, for Maria Riddell had offended him, and the Duchess of Gordon had not, it is monstrous to suppose he ever could have been). And (2) 'In any case, the newspaper incident must have given Burns a strong impression that Henry Dundas was no warm friend or admirer of his, and would not facilitate his rapid promotion.' (1) The true reply to a set of inferences of this temper is that Dundas had never read either For A' That or Thou Ling'ring Star; that he knew not Highland Mary from Bonie Jean; that he recked not of Burns Anniversaries, and had not so much as carved the haggis at a Burns Club Dinner; and that, being thus lamentably ignorant, he took no pains to secure his reputation with posterity by providing preferment for a greater than Homer and Shakespeare, who was also independent enough to think with the Whigs, and withal so admirably honest that he disdained to dissemble his opinions! But, to take at least the second of these inferences seriously:—(1) Either Dundas wrote or contrived the lampoon or he did not, and Burns believed it or he did not; and if Dundas had nothing to do with the lampoon, then the grandiloquent theory vanishes into space, whether Burns believed, or did not believe, in Dundas's writing or contriving. (2) Demonstrably Burns, though a Scotsman, was not a Burnsite, and stood in no need of a certain surgical operation. (3) Two years after the event, Burns states that he never saw the name of Dundas in the newspapers but his heart felt ‘straitened for room’ in his bosom; but he gives a quite different reason for the straitening, and doesn’t so much as refer to the outrage done on him by the Naval Treasurer. And (4) The Star was a party journal; Burns, anxious for advancement as he was, would still be meddling with politics from a party point of view; he insisted on contributing to The Star; and his ‘rapid promotion’ was pretty certainly made impossible by his contributions.

VOL. IV,
MONTGOMERIE'S PEGGY

Cromek (1808). Inscribed in the First Common Place Book, September 1785, where it is described as "done, something in imitation of the manner of a noble old Scottish Piece, called M'Millan's Peggy." It is set to the tune, Galla Water.

'My Montgomerie's Peggy was my deity for six or eight months. She had been bred, tho' as the world says, without any just pretence for it, in a style of life rather elegant. But as Vanburgh says in one of his comedies, my "damn'd Star found me out" there too, for though I began the affair, merely in a gaîté de cœur, or, to tell the truth, what would scarcely be believed, a vanity of showing my parts in courtship, particularly my abilities at a billet doux, which I always piqu'd myself upon, made me lay siege to her; and when, as I always do in my foolish gallantries, I had battered myself into a very warm affection for her, she told me, one day, in a flag of truce, that her fortress had been for some time before the rightful property of another; but with the greatest friendship and politeness, she offered me every alliance, except actual possession" (R. B.). Mrs. Begg stated that the girl was housekeeper at Coilfield House.

THE LASS OF CESSNOCK BANKS

Cromek (1808) in an imperfect form: 'From the oral communication of a lady residing in Glasgow.' Reprinted in the Aldine Edition (1839) from an original ms. Tune, If He Be a Butcher Neat and Trim. As Cromek’s version is not authentic, we deem it unnecessary to give the variations.

The heroine is supposed to have been the Elison Begbie—daughter of a farmer in the parish of Galston—to whom Burns made what was probably his first offer of marriage, in letters (1780–81), included in his published Correspondence. By some she is also supposed to have been the heroine of And I'll Kiss Thee Yet (Vol. iii. p. 34).

STANZA IX. Line 1. Scott Douglas substitutes ‘Her bosom is’ for ‘Her teeth are,’ on the supposition that the subject of the young lady’s teeth being fully covered in Stanza xi. the Aldine Editor must have made an error in transcribing. But there is no authority for the emendation, if emendation it be.

STANZA XIV. See Prefatory Note to It Is Na, Jean, Thy Bonie Face, Vol. iii. p. 374.

THO’ FICKLE FORTUNE

CROMEK (1808). Inscribed in the First Common Place Book, September 1785. ‘The above was an extempore under the pressure of a heavy train of misfortunes, which, indeed, threatened to undo me altogether. It was just at the close of that dreadful period mentioned on page 8th (see Vol. i. p. 375, Prefatory Note to A Prayer in the Prospect of Death), and though the weather has brightened up a little with me, yet there has always been since, a “tempest brewing round me in the grim sky” of futurity, which I pretty plainly see will, some time or other, perhaps ere long, overwhelm me, and drive me into some doleful dell to pine in solitary, squalid wretchedness’ (R. B.). He also states it to have been written ‘in imitation of an old Scotch song well known among the country ingle sides,’ and he sets down one stanza thereof, to mark the ‘debt I owe to the author, as the repeating of that verse has lighted up my flame a thousand times’:

‘When clouds in skies do come together
To hide the brightness of the sun,
There will surely be some pleasant weather,
When a’ the storms are past and gone.’

Slightly altered, Stanza 1. stands for the final quatrain of I Dream’d I Lay (Vol. iii. p. 19).
RAGING FORTUNE
Cromek (1808). Inscribed in the First Common Place Book, September 1785, next to Tho' Fickle Fortune. 'Twas at the same time I set about composing an air in the old Scotch style. I am not musical scholar enough to prick down my tune properly, so it can never see the light, and perhaps 'tis no great matter, but the following were the verses I composed to suit it.... The tune consisted of three parts, so that the above verses just went through the whole Air' (R. B.).

MY FATHER WAS A FARMER
Cromek (1808). Tune, The Weaver and his Shuttle, O. Inscribed in the First Common Place Book, April 1784:— 'The following song is a wild rhapsody, miserably deficient in versification, but as the sentiments are the genuine feelings of my heart, for that reason I have a particular pleasure in conning it over' (R. B.). It faintly resembles a song in an old chap at Abbotsford, My Father Was a Farmer, and a Farmer's Son Am I.

O, LEAVE NOVELS
Currie (1801). Tune, Donald Blue. Included in Johnson's Museum (Vol. vi. 1803): 'By Burns.' We have omitted a refrain, 'Sing tal lal lay.'

THE MAUCHLINE LADY
Cromek (1808). Inscribed in the First Common Place Book, August 1785. Made to the tune of I Had a Horse, and I Had Nae Mair, it is a kind of parody of that curious and very Scottish ballad:
A Fragment. Tune. Dainty Davie

There was a birkie born in Kyle,
But what na day, o' what na style,
I doubt it's hardly worth the while
To be fae nice wi Davie,

Looze me on thy curly bow,
Bonnie Davie, dainty Davie;
Looze me on thy curly bow,
Though ay my dainty Davie.

Out Monarch's kindmost year but ane
That five an twenty days began.
It was then a blast o' January was Blew hafell in on Davie.

My purse was light, and my heart was sair,
And my wit it was fu' ready.
And sae I thought me on a time,
Outwittens of my daddy,
To fee myself to a lawland laird
Wha had a bonny lady,' etc.

LINE 1. 'Stewart Kyle': The northern half of the Kyle district of Ayrshire. Burns removed from Mount Oliphant (in King's Kyle) to Lochlie (in Kyle Stewart) in 1777; and in March 1784 he changed to Mossiel (also in Kyle Stewart).

8. The 'Mauchline lady' was no doubt Jean Armour.

ONE NIGHT AS I DID WANDER
Cromek (1808). Inscribed in the Gluiriddell Abridgement of the First Common Place Book.

THERE WAS A LAD
Cromek (1808). A different set is inscribed in the Second Common Place Book, Davie being substituted for Robin, and the chorus being that of the old song, Daintie Davie (see Vol. ii. p. 311):

'Leeze me on thy curly pow,
Bonie Davie, Dainty Davie!
Leeze me on thy curly pow,
Thou 'se ay my dainty Davy!'

The chorus finally adopted appears to trace back to the refrain of another old song, The Roving Lad With the Tartan Plaid :—'For he is a rantin, rovin lad,' etc.

STANZA I. LINE 1. 'There was a birkie born in Kyle,' Common Place Book :—Kyle is an ancient division of Ayrshire.

STANZA II. LINE 2. 'Was five-and-twenty days begun':—
'Jan. 25th, 1759, the date of my Bardship's vital existence' (R. B.).

4. 'Hansel'—the first gift. In Scotland, 'Hansel
Monday' — the first Monday of the New Year, when children are accustomed to go in bands to beg 'hansel,' which may be given either in bread or money.

Stanza IV. Line 3. 'He'11 gie his daddie's name a blow,' Second Common Place Book.

Stanza VI. is usually omitted by the Editorial Prude.

Lines 1-2 in Cunningham read :—

'Gude faith,' quo scho 'I doubt you gar
The bonie lasses lie aspar.'

Cromek left a blank after lasses in Line 2. The reading we have adopted is that of the Second Common Place Book.

WILL YE GO TO THE INDIES, MY MARY

Currie (1800). Sent to Thomson in October 1792, as a substitute for Will Ye Gang to the Ewe-bughts, Marion, which Thomson, like the pedant he was, could not approve. 'In my very early years, when I was thinking of going to the West Indies, I took the following farewell of a dear girl. It is quite trifling, and has nothing of the merits of Ewe-bughts, but it will fill up this page.' Thomson replied that he did not mean to supplant The Ewe-bughts, and that what he wanted Burns to do was to try his 'hand on some of the inferior stanzas.' Burns took not the hint; nor did Thomson accept his song :—'This is a very poor song which I do not mean to include in my Collection.' For Mary Campell, the supposed heroine (though this is at least doubtful), see Vol. iii. p. 308, Prefatory Note to My Highland Lassie, 0.

HER FLOWING LOCKS

Cromek (1808).

Stanza II. Line 1. 'Her lips are roses wat wi' dew':— Cf. The Blue-eyed Lassie, Vol. iii. p. 83, Stanza 1. Line 6; though the latter heroine's locks were, not 'the raven's wing,' but, 'golden ringlets bright.'
THE LASS O' BALLOCHMYLE

Gray Tracts, No. 2 (1799), Polyhymnia, No. 18 (1799), and Currie (1800). Sent to Miss Wilhelminia Alexander in a letter of 18th November 1786:—'The enclosed song was the work of my return home, and perhaps but poorly answers what might have been expected from such a scene. I am going to print a second edition of my Poems, but cannot insert those verses without your permission.’ The lady took no notice of the request; but a ms. Copy—ms. (A)—in the possession of Mr. Godfrey E. P. Arkwright of Adbury House, Newbury, sets forth this note:—'The above song cannot be published without the consent of the lady, which I have desired a common friend to ask.' In all probability this was the copy submitted to the 'jury of literati' in Edinburgh. It went unpublished—not because the writer could not get Miss Alexander's consent but—because it and a song on Miss Peggy Kennedy (Young Peggy, Vol. iii. p. 1) were 'found defamatory libels against the fastidious powers of Poesy and Taste.' In Polyhymnia, it is stated to 'have been composed by Robert Burns, from the emotions of gratitude and esteem which he felt for the worthy family, for the kindness and attention they had shewn him': a rather too Platonic theory of its origin.

Miss Wilhelminia Alexander was the sister of Claud Alexander, who succeeded the Whitefoords in Ballochmyle. She is referred to in one of the suppressed stanzas of The Vision:—

'While lovely Wilhelminia warms
The coldest heart.'

Later in life she set a higher price than erst upon the compliment designed in Burns's verses. She died unmarried, as late as 1843.

A ms.—ms. (B)—is at Mossgiel; and the two last stanzas are included in a ms.—ms. (C)—in the possession of Mr. Adam Wood, Troon.
NOTES

THE STANZA I. LINE 7. 'Unless where green-wood echoes rang,'

LASS o’ POLYHYMNIA.

STANZA II. LINES 7, 8. in mss. (A and B), the Gray Tract, and POLYHYMNIA read:—

'The lily's hue and rose's dye Bespoke the lass of Ballochmyle.'

STANZA III. LINES 1-4 in the Gray Tract read:—

'Sweet is a morn in flowery May,
And soft a night in harvest mild,
When wandering in the garden gay,
Or roaming thro' the lonely wild.'

MS. (A) has a morn for 'the morn' and an ev'n for 'is night,' and POLYHYMNIA 'Harvest,' for 'Autumn.' 7. 'And all her other charms are foil'd,' MS. (B); and MS. (A) and POLYHYMNIA have the same reading with 'works' for 'charms.'

STANZA IV. LINE 1. 'O if she were a country maid,' MSS. (A and B); 'O gif she were,' Gray Tract; 'O gin she were,' POLYHYMNIA. 4. 'That ever rose on Scotland's plain,' Currie.

STANZA V. LINE 1. 'Then pride may climb the slippery steep,' POLYHYMNIA. 4. 'Or downward dig the Indian mine,' Gray Tract and POLYHYMNIA. 7. 'And every day has joys divine,' MSS. (A, B, and C); brings for 'has,' POLYHYMNIA; 'bring,' Gray Tract.

THE NIGHT WAS STILL

BLACKIE'S Land of Burns (1840). The ms. was given to one of the daughters of Dr. Lawrie of Newmilns; and commemorates a dance—when Burns for the first time heard the spinet—in the manse of Newmilns on the banks of Irvine. (See Vol. i. p. 405.)

MASONIC SONG

CUNNINGHAM (1834). Said to have been recited by Burns at his admission as an honorary member of the Kilwinning St. John's Lodge, Kilmarnock, 26th October 1786.
'Willie' was Major William Parker, Grand Master (see Masonic Vol. ii. p. 370, Prefatory Note to To Hugh Parker). song

The ms. is in the possession of Sir Robert Jardine.

THE BONIE MOOR-HEN

Cromek (1808). A ms. is in the possession of Mrs. Andrews, Newcastle.

A rather scandalous adaptation from I Rede Ye Beware o' the Ripples, Young Man, a song (attributed to Burns) in The Merry Muses. There is also a Jacobitish ditty (real or sham), The Bonny Moorhen:—

'My bony moorhen, my bony moorhen,
Up in the gray hill, down in the glen:
It's when ye gang butt the house, when ye gang ben,
Ay drink a health to my bony moorhen,' etc.

Another Muir Hen, more in the manner of the Burns, was reprinted in the Leslie Ballad Book, 1827:—

'The bonie muir hon gaed doon the den
To gather in her cattel;
I bent my bow to fire at her,
But I could never ettel,
Sing Archie doodum diddledum dum, etc.
And ay the nearer that I cam,
It's ay she sang the louder:—
"I loe the young men wondrous well,
But they do want the powder," etc.

There is further 'The Bony Moor Hen: A New Song' in The Jolly Ploughman's Garland, included in the Bell Collection of chaps at Abbotsford:—

'The bony moor Hen is gone over the main,
And she will be back against summer again;
I'll shoot her with an arrow, there no one shall ken
That ever I ruffled the bony moor hen,' etc.

See also Vol. i., Prefatory Note to Epistle to John Rankine, p. 385.
NOTES

‘Do not publish The Moor-Hen. Do not for your sake and mine’ (Clarinda to Burns, January 30th, 1788).

STANZA I. LINE 2. ‘Our lads gaed a-hunting, one day at the dawn,’ MS.

STANZA III. LINE 4. ‘But his rays were outshone, and but mark’d where she lay,’ MS.

HERE’S A BOTTLE

Cromek (1808). A ms. was before the Aldine Editor (1839). Gilbert Burns expressed to Cromek his doubts of Robert’s authorship; but he may have been influenced by a desire to disassociate his brother from the sentiment of the song. In any case it was possibly suggested by The Bottle and Friend, in the Damon and Phillis Garland, included in the Bell Collection at Abbotsford:—

‘Bright glory is a trifle and so is ambition,
I despise a false heart and a lofty condition,
For pride is a folly, for it I’ll not contend
But I will enjoy my bottle and friend:
In a little close room
So neat and so trim,
O there I will enjoy
My bottle and friend,’ etc.

THE BONIE LASS OF ALBANIE

Chambers (1852). From a ms. then in the possession of B. Nightingale. For a copy of this ms.—ms. (B)—we are indebted to Mr. Davey, Great Russell Street, London. Suggested, it may be, by The Bony Lass of Anglesey, the song was also inscribed in the Second Common Place Book.

Charlotte Stuart, daughter of Charles Edward, the ‘Young Pretender,’ by Clementina Walkinshaw, was baptized 29th October 1753 (Mémoire in the Ministère des Affaires Étrangères, for an extract from which we
THE BONY LASS OF ALBANY

From the ms. in the possession of Mr. Davey, Great Russell Street, London Slightly Reduced.

A song by the same hand

June, Mary's dream

My heart is wea, and unco wea,
To think upon the raging sea,
That roars between two gardens green
And the bony lads of Albany.

This lovely Maid's of royal blood,
That ruled Albion's kingdoms three.
But Oh, alas, for her bony face!
They've wrang'd the lads of Albany.

In the rolling tide of spreading Clyde
There sits an isle of high degree,
And a town of fame whose princely name
Should grace the lads of Albany.
But there is a Youth, a wild life Youth, that fills the place where she should be: We'll sent him o'er to his native shore And bring out air sweet Albany Has the day and was the day A false thoughter van the gree Thower commands the towers and lands. The royal right of Albany.

We'll daily pray, we'll nightly pray, In bended knees most fervently The time may come, with pipe and drum We'll welcome home said Albany.
are indebted to Mr. Andrew Lang). In the register of baptisms at Liège, the child is entered as the daughter of D. Johnson and the noble dame Charlotte Pitt; and there is other clear evidence that, though at this time Charles treated Miss Walkinshaw as his wife, she neither was married to him nor supposed herself to be his wife. After Charles's separation from his wife, the Countess of Albany, he sent for his illegitimate daughter Charlotte, who abode with him till his death, 30th January 1788. In 1784 he made out letters of legitimation, and these were confirmed by the Parlement of Paris, 6th December 1787, when she took the style of Duchess of Albany. But the legitimation did not imply (as was supposed at the time in England, and as, of course, was credited by Burns) that Miss Walkinshaw had been married to the Prince, but rather that Miss Walkinshaw had not. She died soon after her father.

STANZA II. LINE 1. 'The lovely maid's of Royal blood,' ms. (B). 4. 'They've wrangled the Lass of Albanie,' ms. (B).

STANZA III. LINE 3. 'And a town':—Rothesay in the Isle of Bute. The eldest sons of the Scottish Kings were Dukes of Rothesay.

STANZA IV. LINE 1. 'But there's a youth,' erroneous reading. Both mss. have 'There is.'

STANZA VI. LINE 4. 'The time may come,' ms. (B).

AMANG THE TREES

Cronik (1808). Tune, The King of France. Written in honour of Niel Gow (1727-1807), the famous fiddler, whom Burns met during his Northern tour in 1787.

STANZA I. LINE 3. 'Drone':—The part of the bagpipe which produces the low bass note.

STANZA II. LINE 1. 'Capon craws' = castrate—(i.e. squeaky) —crowings. 5. 'But a royal ghaist':—James I. of Scotland, a great patron of musicians and artists.
NOTES

THE CHEVALIER'S LAMENT

Gray Tracts (1799) and Currie (1800). Included also in Thomson (1799). 'Yesterday, my dear sir, as I was riding thro' a track of melancholy, joyless muirs, between Galloway and Ayrshire; it being Sunday, I turned my thoughts to psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, and your favourite air, Capt. O'Kean, coming at length in my head, I tried these words to it. You will see that the first part of the tune must be repeated' (Burns to Cleghorn, 31st March 1788). Only stanza i. was sent to Cleghorn at that time. 'If I could hit on another stanza equal to The Small Birds Rejoice, I do myself honestly avow that I think it a very superior song' (R. B. to Thomson, 1st April 1793). He sent no more to Thomson either, and although that specialist included the song in his Scottish Airs, it was merely 'from a ms. by Burns.'

It is entered in the Second Common Place Book—ms. (A)—and there is a ms. at Lochryan—ms. (B)—with another in the possession of Lord Rosebery—ms. (C)—'composed at the desire of a friend who had equal enthusiasm for the air and the subject.'

Stanza i. Line 3. 'The primroses blush,' ms. (B); 'The hawthorn trees blow,' Gray Tract. 4. 'Bedeck the green vale,' Gray Tract. 5. 'But what can seem pleasant,' Gray Tract.

Stanza ii. Line 2. 'To set on his throne,' Gray Tract. 4. 'But I can find none,' ms. (A). 7. 'Your deeds proved so loyal,' ms. (A). 9. 'You no sweeter return,' mss. (A and C) and Gray Tract.

YESTREEN I HAD A PINT O' WINE

Oliver (1801), Cromek (1810), Clarke (1823), and The Merry Muses. The Anna of the song was Anne Park, niece of Mrs. Hyslop of the Globe Tavern, Dumfries.
She bore a daughter to Burns, 31st March 1791, which was first sent to Mossgiel, and afterwards fostered by Mrs. Burns along with her baby, William Nicol, born ten days after it. According to Chambers it was Mrs. Burns's plain duty so to do: inasmuch as if she hadn't gone to visit relatives in Ayrshire, and thus provided her spouse with both an opportunity and an excuse, the child would never have been begotten. Be this as it may, nothing is known of the mother's after-life. Indeed, she is said by some to have died in childbirth of this girl.

The song was sent to Thomson in April 1793:—

'Shepherds, I Have Lost My Love is to me a heavenly air—what would you think of a set of Scots verses to it? I have made one, a good while ago, which I think is the best love song I ever composed in my life, but in its original state is not quite a lady's song. I enclose the original, which please present with my best compliments to Mr. Erskine, and I also enclose an altered not amended copy for you, if you choose to set the tune to it, and let the Irish verses follow' (R. B.). Thomson did not choose to set the tune to it; but the copy—ms. (B)—is at Brechin Castle. It was also inscribed in the Glenriddell Book—ms. (A). Neither ms. has the Postscript. A set—with the Postscript—is included in Oliver (1801) and in Clarke's Songs and Ballads of Robert Burns (1823), and as The Lovely Lass of Allan-Doon was printed in a chapbook published by J. J. Niel, Airdrie.

Stanza i. Line 4. 'The raven locks of Anna,' Oliver and chapbook.

Stanza ii. Line 1. 'The Israelite in wilderness,' ms. (A).

Stanza iii. Line 4. 'The lovely form of Anna,' ms. (B).

Stanza iv. Lines 1, 2. in ms. (B) read:

>'While rapt encircled in her arms
I speechless gaze on Anna.'

Postscript, Stanza 1. 'The Kirk and State may say so still,' chapbook.
SWEET ARE THE BANKS

Scott Douglas (1877). The first set of a song—of which the second is Ye Flowery Banks (p. 28), while the third—which, being the worst, is naturally the most popular—The Banks o' Doon, was published in Johnson's Museum (see Vol. iii. p. 124). It was sent in a letter to Alexander Cunningham, 11th March 1791:—'My song is intended to sing to a Strathspey reel of which I am very fond, called in Cumming's Collection of Strathspeys, Ballendaloch's Reel; and in other collections that I have met with it is known by the name of Camdelmore. It takes three stanzas of four lines each to go through the whole tune' (R. B.).

YE FLOWERY BANKS

Cromek (1808). The second set of Sweet are the Banks (see Prefatory Note, above). Sent in an undated letter—probably of March 1791—to John Ballantine of Ayr:—'While here I sit, sad and solitary, by the side of a fire in a little country inn, and drying my wet clothes, in pops a poor fellow of a sodger, and tells me he is going to Ayr. By heavens! say I to myself, with a tide of good spirits which the magic of that sound "Auld Toon of Ayr" conjured up, I will send my last song to Mr. Ballantine' (R. B.).

CALEDONIA

Currie (1800). The ms. is in the Watson Collection. Sent to Johnson of the Museum, 23rd January 1789, with the following (hitherto) unpublished note:—'I shall be in Edinburgh, my dear sir, in about a month, when we shall overhaul the whole collection and report progress. The following I hope will suit the excellent tune it is designed for. Till we meet, adieu.' The tune was Caledonian Hunt's Delight; but Johnson did not publish the song.
NOTES

STANZA I. LINE 1. 'There was once a day,' Currie.
STANZA III. LINE 5. 'And terror their cry,' Currie.
   'And ruin'd a world beside,' Currie.
STANZA IV. LINE 1. 'Cameleon-Savage':—The Pict, who dyed and stained and parti-coloured his person with woad.
STANZA V. LINE 8. Haco the Norseman was defeated at Largs, according to the chroniclers, 2nd October 1263; and Kenneth III. of Scotland overthrew the Danes at Luncarty, Perthshire, in 970.

YOU'RE WELCOME, WILLIE STEWART

LOCKHART, Life of Burns (1829). Originally inscribed on a crystal tumbler, now at Abbotsford, the song is modelled on the same Jacobitism as O Lovely Polly Stewart (see Vol. iii. p. 429). See also Vol. ii. p. 379, Prefatory Note to To William Stewart. Stewart, who was factor at Close-burn, died in 1812.

STANZA I. LINE 3. 'The tappet hen':—A bottle shaped like a hen, and holding three quarts of claret. Cf. Allan Ramsay's An Ode to the Ph—:—

'That mutchkin stoup it hads but dribs,
Then let's get in the tappit hen':—

and the old song, Andrew Wi' His Cutty Gun:—

'For weel she lo'ed a Hawick gill,
And leugh to see a tappit hen.'

WHEN FIRST I SAW

CHAMBERS (1852), who states that it appeared in the New York Mirror for 1846, and that the heroine of it was Miss Jean Jeffrey, whom Burns celebrated in The Blue-eyed Lassie (see Vol. iii. p. 362, Prefatory Note to The Blue-eyed Lassie). But the song is so poor that, had not Alexander Smith (Edition 1868) collated the text 'with a copy in the poet's handwriting,' we should have classed it with the 'Improbables.'
NOTES

BEHOLD THE HOUR

FIRST SET

CLARINDA CORRESPONDENCE (1843). Sent to Clarinda, 27th December 1791. For the second and amended set, published in Thomson's Scottish Airs, see Vol. iii. p. 265. This first one differs little from the original in The Charmer (1782) and other books:

'Behold the fatal hour arrive,
Nicè, my Nicè, ah, farewell,
Severed from thee, can I survive,
From thee whom I have lov'd so well':—

and one cannot choose but wonder that Burns, for all his habit of appropriation, should ever have palmed it off upon a sweetheart as his own.

HERE'S A HEALTH TO THEM THAT'S AWA

The Edinburgh Gazetteer (1792) and Cromek (1808), from a ms. now in the British Museum. Reprinted from the Gazetteer in the Scots Magazine for January 1818. Founded on a Jacobite song, of which Burns sent the following stanza (amended, or, it may be, perverted) to Johnson's Museum (No. 412, Vol. v. 1792):

'Here's a health to them that's awa,
Here's a health to them that's awa;
Here's a health to them that were here short syne,
But canna be here the day.
It's guid to be merry and wise,
It's guid to be honest and true;
It's guid to be aff wi' the auld love
Before ye be on wi' the new.'

Stanza iv. and the last quatrain of Stanza v. are not in the British Museum ms. nor in Cromek. Hogg in his Relics gave a set from an old ms. collection of songs then in the possession of Hon. Mrs. Rollo. The main difference as regards the stanza quoted above consists in the substitution of 'him' for 'them,' 'dursta' for 'canna,' and HERE's A 'King' for 'love.'

STANZA I. LINE 5. 'It's guid to be merry and wise.' Cf. the black-letter ballad (Roxburghe Collection), The Good Fellow's Advice, with the following refrain:

'Tis good to be merry and wise.

This counsel also forms the refrains of other black-letter ballads, as The Father's Wholesome Admonition (Crawford, Pepys, and Roxburghe Collections); and a late derivative, Be Merry and Wise, included in a chap, of which we have seen a copy with the date 1794:

'To be merry and wise is a proverb of old,
But a maxim so good can't too often be told.
Then attend to my song, nor my maxims despise,
For I mean to be merry, but merry and wise.'

STANZA III. LINE 3. 'Tammie, the Norland laddie':—The Hon. Thomas Erskine, afterwards Lord Erskine (1750-1823), who in 1792, being retained for Thomas Paine, resolved to obey the call to defend him, and was thereupon dismissed from his office as Attorney-General to the Prince of Wales.

STANZA IV. LINE 3. 'Maitland and Wycombe':—'Maitland' was James, eighth Earl of Lauderdale (1759-1839), who in July 1790 was elected a Scots representative peer, and during the debate in the House of Lords, 31st May 1792, on the King's Proclamation 'against seditious writings,' had come forward 'to vindicate himself, and those with whom he associated, from the gross calumnies levelled against them by the Proclamation,' which he 'stigmatised as a most malignant and impotent measure.' In August following he left for France along with Dr. John Moore. He became a strong sympathiser with the French Revolution, protested against the war with France, and on one occasion appeared in the House of Lords 'clothed in the rough garb of Jacobinism.' 'Wycombe' was John Henry G.
HERE'S A Petty, second Marquis of Lansdowne (1765-1809): who, from 1784 until he succeeded his father in 1805, was styled Earl of Wycombe; at this time represented Chipping Wycombe; and in the House of Commons spoke against the Proclamation. His father, William Petty, first Marquis of Lansdowne (1739-1805), also in the House of Lords, supported Lauderdale.

STANZA V. LINE 3. 'Chieftain M'Leod':—Colonel Norman M'Leod of M'Leod (1754-1801), Member for Inverness.

AH, CHLORIS

Aldine Edition (1839), from a ms. then in possession of the Editor. Tune, Major Graham. For Chloris see Vol. iii. p. 482, Prefatory Note to Lassie Wi' the Lint-White Locks.

The thing is strongly reminiscent of the delightful verses of Sir Charles Sedley (1639-1701), which Allan Ramsay swept into his Tea-Table Miscellany:

'Ah Chloris, could I now but sit
As unconcern'd as when
Your infant beauty could beget
Nor happiness, nor pain,' etc.

PRETTY PEG

Edinburgh Magazine (January 1808) with three additional stanzas, clearly not written by Burns. Again repeated in the Edinburgh Magazine for January 1818—without the additions, the correspondent affirming that he had copied from the Poet's ms. As he also included a fragment, Yon Wand'ring Rill, undoubtedly by Burns, and part of a song sent to Thomson, the presumption is that he had genuine ms. before him. The fragment appears in many Editions, but an alteration of a word is made to render it fit for print—and we have decided to draw the line at mutilation. Pretty Peg was published in the Aldine Edition (1839).
NOTES

MEG O’ THE MILL
SECOND SET

Currie (1800). Sent to Thomson, April 1793—along with There Was a Lass. ‘I know these songs are not to have the luck to please you, else you might be welcome to them’ (R. B.). It was written for Jackie Hume’s Lament. Thomson asked him to write another song to this air, but he replied:—‘My song, Ken Ye What Meg o’ the Mill Has Gotten, pleases me so much that I cannot try my hand at another song to the same air; so I shall not attempt it. I know you will laugh at this; but ilka man wears his belt his ain gait.’ For the first set see Vol. iii. p. 200. The ms. is at Brechin Castle.

PHILLIS THE FAIR

Currie (1800). Sent to Thomson, August 1793. ‘I likewise tried my hand on Robin Adair, and you will probably think with little success; but it is such a damned, crampt, out-of-the-way measure, that I despair of doing anything better to it. . . . So much for namby-pamby. I may, after all, try my hand on it in Scots verse. There I always find myself at home.’ Thomson replied that he would be glad to see Burns ‘give Robin Adair a Scottish dress,’ but that ‘Peter’ was furnishing him with an English suit. The ms. is at Brechin Castle.

STANZA I. LINE 3. ‘Tasting the breathing Spring,’ Currie; but this was Thomson’s suggestion. 7. ‘Such thy morn! did I cry,’ Currie, from Thomson.

O, SAW YOU MY DEAR, MY PHILLY

Currie (1800). A degradation of My Eppie M’Nab (Vol. iii. p. 101). For the origin see also Vol. iii. p. 375, Prefatory Note to My Eppie M’Nab. Sent to Thomson, 19th October 1794:—‘To descend to business; if you like my idea of When She Cam Ben She Bobbit, the following stanzas of mine altered a little from what they were formerly when set to another air, may perhaps do instead of worse stanzas' (R. B.). Thomson did not like them. There are two ms. copies at Brechin Castle. In the second 'Dear' occurs throughout instead of 'Dearie' and 'Dearest.'

'TWAS NA HER BONIE BLUE E'E

Currie (1800). Sent to Thomson in April 1795, for the tune Laddie Lie Near Me. Thomson thought the song not equal to certain others sent at the same time, though 'very pleasing'; and Burns shortly afterwards wrote:— 'My verses to Cauld Kail I will suppress, and also those to Laddie Lie Near Me. They are neither worthy of my name nor of your book.' Thomson didn't publish the song. The ms. is at Brechin Castle.

WHY, WHY TELL THY LOVER

Currie (1800). Written for the tune, Caledonian Hunt's Delight: 'Such is the d—d peculiarity of the rhythm of this air that I find it impossible to make another stanza to suit it' (R. B. to Thomson, 3rd July 1795). Thomson replied:—'The fragment for The Caledonian Hunt is quite suited to the original measure of the air, and as it plagues you so, the fragment must content it.' But he inserted on the margin of the copy:—'Instead of this poor song I will take the one Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon, for the air here mentioned; but I purpose attaching this to some other air, if I find one to suit it.' He didn't find one. The ms. is at Brechin Castle.

THE PRIMROSE

Sent to Thomson (who would none of it), 1793:—'For Todlin Hame take the following old English song, which I dare say is but little known' (R. B.). 'N.B. I have altered it a little' (R. B.). 'This pretty little poem,' wrote Scott Douglas, 'is so much altered from the original . . . that it may almost be reckoned as Burns's own.' The criticism is fatuous, even for Scott Douglas; but a later than Scott Douglas has captured it bodily, and has equipped it with embellishments of his own. 'Not a little,' runs his commentary on Burns to Thomson: 'so much so (sic) that it is more Burns's than Ramsay's.' Thus the more modern Burnsite, and for once in a way he is found utterly at variance with the god of his idolatry; for if the song had been 'Ramsay's,' how could Burns have described it as 'English' and as 'little known'? As matter of fact there is nothing like it in Ramsay, the first set being Thomas Carew's (Poems, 1640), while the second is Robert Herrick's (Hesperides, 1648). Here is the Carew:—

'Ask me why I send you here
This firstling of the infant Year?
Ask me why I send to you
This Primrose, all bepearl'd with dew?
I straight whisper to your ears:—
"The sweets of Love are wash'd with tears."

'Ask me why this flower does show
So yellow-green, and sickly too?
Ask me why the stalk is weak,
And hending, yet it does not break?
I must tell you:—"These discover
What doubts and fears are in a Lover."'

This set it is that was ravished for Thomson's book, and ravished so violently that in very deed it may 'almost be reckoned as'—neither Burns nor Carew. Here is the Herrick:—

'Ask me why I send you here
This sweet Infanta of the Year?
Ask me why I send to you
This Primrose thus bepearl'd with dew?
I will whisper in your ears:—
"The sweets of Love are mix'd with tears."

"This sweets of Love are mix'd with tears."
THE PRIMROSE

'Ask me why this flower does show
So yellow-green, and sickly too?
Ask me why the stalk is weak
And bending (yet it doth not break)?
I will answer:—"These discover
What fainting hopes are in a lover."'

Now, it had not been wonderful if Scott Douglas had known nothing of either Carew or Herrick; for almost the sole concern of that loyal, illiterate soul was Burns. But for his successor, born to flourish in an age of literary handbooks and University Extension Lectures—his successor, who has seen a Ramsay, of which Burns knew nothing, and which does not (it appears) exist, but who has not discovered a pair of English classics which do—what is to be said of his successor? For Burns, his attitude is characteristic. He wanted a vamp for Todlin Home; he recked nothing (and small blame to him) of either Herrick or Carew; and he laid hands, as was his wont, albeit more clumsily than was his wont, on the first 'old English song, which I dare say is but little known,' he came across—just as he would have laid hands on Queen and Huntress or on Hear, Ye Ladies, or Bid Me to Live, or anything not very much known which had served his turn. He did but ply his trade with a view to filling a page in Thomson's book; and as he claimed not the maker's honours, but was content with the vampier's, there is no more to be said about the matter in so far as he is concerned. But one can't help wishing that he'd lived to correct the enthusiasm of certain among his commentators.

O, WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST

Currie (1800). Written during his last illness in honour of Jessie Lewars (see Vol. iii. p. 467, Prefatory Note to Here's a Health to Her I Loe Dear), after she had played The Wren to him on the piano.
NOTES

INTERPOLATIONS
YOUR FRIENDSHIP

Included in a poem to Clarinda, Talk Not of Love, which Burns altered for Johnson’s Museum (No. 186, Vol. ii. 1788), where it appears as ‘By a Lady,’ and is signed M. The stanzas were substituted for this one of Clarinda’s:—

‘The hand of Friendship I accept,
May Honour be your guard,
Virtue our intercourse direct,
Her smiles our dear reward!’

Clarinda’s song was modelled on one found in The Charmer (1782) and other books:—

‘Love never more shall give me pain,
My fancy’s fixt on thee,’ etc.

FOR THEE IS LAUGHING NATURE

Written to complete a song by Clarinda, an additional quatrain being necessary to fill the tune, in Johnson’s Museum (No. 190, Vol. ii. 1788). It was interpolated as the first quatrain of the second and last octave. The Clarinda, which is described as ‘By a Lady,’ and signed M., is entitled To a Blackbird:—

‘Go on, sweet bird, and soothe my care!
Thy cheerful notes will hush despair.
Thy tuneful warblings, void of art,
Thrill sweetly through my aching heart,’ etc.

NO COLD APPROACH

Inserted in the song, The Tears I Shed, by Miss Cranstoun, afterwards the second wife of Professor Dugald Stewart, to complete the last octave, and so fit it for the tune in Johnson’s Museum (No. 340, Vol. iv. 1792). ‘This song of genius was composed by a Miss Cranstoun. It wanted four lines to make all the stanzas suit the music, which I added, and are the first four of the last stanza’ (R. B. in Interleaved Copy).
ALTHO' HE HAS LEFT ME

Inserted by Burns in a song from Herd's Collection, As I Was a Walking, the whole set of which he very slightly altered for Johnson's Museum (No. 348, Vol. iv. 1792), where it appears, As I Was a Wand'ring. This stanza was substituted for the last three in Herd.

LET LOOVE SPARKLE

Inserted by Burns in Jocky Fou and Jenny Fain (in which he also made a few verbal changes) to complete an octave for the tune in Johnson's Museum (No. 381, Vol. iv. 1792).

AS DOWN THE BURN

Currie (1800). Sent to Thomson in September 1793, as a substitute for the final stanza of Robert Crawford's song, Down the Burn, Davie. 'I have this moment tried an alteration, leaving out the last half of the third stanza and the first half of the last stanza, thus' (R. B. to Thomson). Thomson at first accepted Burns's amendment, but in later editions substituted some rubbish of his own for Burns's vamp, in which, by the way, only Lines 2 and 4 and a word or two in Line 5 belong to that poet, the rest being absolute Crawford.

IMPROBABLES

ON ROUGH ROADS

Scott Douglas (Kilmarnock Edition, 1876). According to him, 'it is very familiarly quoted in Ayrshire, as a stray impromptu of Burns's.' But he says not from whom he got it, and an impromptu which had lived for ninety years without getting written or printed—eu donne furieusement à penser!
ELEGY ON STELLA

Inscribed in the Second Common Place Book:—"This poem is the work of some hapless son of the Muses who deserved a better fate. There is a great deal of "the voice of Cona" in his solitary, mournful notes; and had the sentiments been clothed in Shenstone's language, they would have been no discredit to that elegant poet" (R. B.). He sent a copy to Mrs. Dunlop in a letter of 7th July 1789, in which he said that he had met the Elegy in ms., and marked the passages which struck him most. These are Stanzas i. iv. xiii. xiv. (last two lines) xvii. xviii. and xix.; and it is worth noting that he does not include with them Stanza xv., Stanza xvi., or Stanza xx.

The theory of Scott Douglas and others, that the verses were suggested by a visit to the West Highlands in June 1787, when Burns may have visited Mary Campbell's grave—(at Greenock: which, in defiance of geography, appears 'at the last limits of our isle')—is sheer sentiment. The truth is, there is no earthly reason, except the existence of that sentiment, for attributing the thing to Burns; and, as it is utterly unlike his work—especially his work in English, which is far less easy and less fluent—as, too, he suggests that another wrote it, we see not why it should ever have been printed as his. Scott Douglas unwarrantably inserted the first instead of the third person in Stanzas xv. and xvi.

POEM ON PASTORAL POETRY

Currie (1800), from a ms. in Burns's hand; but Gilbert Burns strongly doubted its authenticity, and internal evidence shows that it may have been written by some contemporary of Allan Ramsay. Thus in Stanza v. that maker is referred to as alive; while no mention is made of either Hamilton of Gilbertfield or Ferguson, one or other of whom may well have been the author. Burns, again, knew nothing of Theocritus and nothing of Maro; and, had he written of pastoral verse, would certainly have quoted, not Pope but, his favourite Shenstone.

STANZA VI. LINE 4. 'Tantallon':—A famous historic stronghold on the east coast of Scotland, near North Berwick.

ON THE DESTRUCTION OF DRUMLANRIG WOODS

Hogg and Motherwell (1835). First published in The Scots Magazine for July (1803), where it is stated that the verses had been found 'written on the window-shutter of a small inn on the banks of the Nith,' and that they were 'supposed to have been written by Burns.' This is a little vague. Cromek, who didn't print the verses, told Creech that they were written by Henry Mackenzie, but there is nothing beyond this statement to confirm the ascription: though one could credit Mackenzie with them far more easily than one could credit Burns.

THE JOYFUL WIDOWER

This very squalid performance, No. 98 in Johnson (Vol. i. 1787) is attributed by Stenhouse to Burns; but he never acknowledged it. It is included in a chap in the Motherwell Collection,—'Three Excellent Songs, Entered According to Order'—one of the three being The Duke of Hamilton and Mohun's Fight (the duel took place in 1712); but the chap itself is undated. Again, it was published in The Pretty Maiden's Amusement, being a Choice Collection of All the Favourite New Songs, Sung at Both the Theatres, Vauxhall, Renlagh, Marybone, Sadlers' Wells: Printed and sold in Alderney Churchyard, Bowlane'; but this volume also is undated. There are many black-letter ballads—most of them unsavoury enough—on scolding wives.
WHY SHOULD WE IDLY WASTE OUR PRIME
Cunningham (1834). But Cunningham's authority is worthless.

THE TREE OF LIBERTY
Chambers (1838). In this particular case Chambers gave as his authority a ms. then in the possession of Mr. James Duncan, Morefield, Glasgow. The Tree of Liberty reads like a bad blend of Scots Wha Hae and Is There For Honest Poverty; and as the ms. has not been heard of since 1838, we may charitably conclude that Burns neither made the trash nor copied it.

TO A KISS
Chambers (1838). Published in a Liverpool paper called The Kaleidoscope, and there attributed to Burns. It, however, appeared originally (and anonymously) in The Oracle, January 29, 1796, long the favoured organ of the wretched Della Cruscan shoal; and it has the right Anna Matilda smack throughout. After all, too, that a thing is bad enough to have been written by Burns for Thomson is no proof that it is Burns's work.

DELIA: AN ODE
Stewart's Edition (1802) and Lives of Scottish Poets, by the Society of Ancient Scots (1822). This twaddle is said to have been sent to the London Star with the following note:—'Mr. Printer,—If the productions of a simple ploughman can merit a place in the same paper with Sylvester Otway and the other favourites of the Muses who illuminate The Star with the lustre of genius, your insertion of the enclosed trifle will be succeeded by future communications from yours, etc., R. Burns. Ellisland, near Dumfries, 18th May 1789.' The letter more resembles Burns's manner than the 'poem.' But we have found neither in The Star; and the fact that Burns was already in communication with Stuart, and had sent him poems for The Star (see Vol. ii. p. 280) is scarce in keeping with the letter-writer's air and tone.

TO THE OWL

Cromek (1808). 'Found among the Poet's mss. in his own handwriting, with occasional interlineations such as occur in all his primitive effusions'; but attributed by him to John M'Cready, of whom nothing is known. To our mind, those who give the verses to Burns would give him anything.

THE VOWELS: A TALE

Cromek (1808). Also found among the Poet's papers.

ON THE ILLNESS OF A FAVOURITE CHILD

Cunningham (1834). But it is hard to believe that Burns, though his taste in English was none of the finest, could even transcribe such immitigable rubbish.

ON THE DEATH OF A FAVOURITE CHILD

Edinburgh Magazine (July 1814). Burns's daughter, Elizabeth Riddell, died in the autumn of 1795. But this fact can scarce be regarded as proof of the authenticity of verses altogether in the manner of Mrs. Hemans.

ADDENDUM, ETC.

See Matty's Meek (Vol. iii. p. 207). The song is complete as it stands; but this additional stanza was accidentally omitted.

ROBERT BURNS

In 1759 the Kirk of Scotland, though a less potent and offensive tyranny than it had been in the good old times, was still a tyranny, and was still offensive and still potent enough to make life miserable, to warp the characters of men and women, and to turn the tempers and affections of many from the kindly, natural way. True it is that Hutcheson (1694–1746) had for some years taught, and taught with such authority as an University chair can give, a set of doctrines in absolute antagonism with the principles on which the Kirk of Scotland’s rule was based, and with the ambitions which the majority in the Kirk of Scotland held in view. But these doctrines, sane and invigorating as they were, had not reached the general; and in all departments of life among the general the Kirk of Scotland was a paramount influence, and, despite the intrusion of some generous intelligences, was largely occupied with the work of narrowing the minds, perverting the instincts, and constraining the spiritual and social liberties of its subjects. In 1759, however, there was secreted the certainty of a revulsion against its ascendency; for that year saw the birth of the most popular poet, and the most anti-clerical withal, that Scotland ever bred. He came of the people on both sides; he had a high courage, a proud heart, a daring mind, a matchless gift of speech, an abundance of humour and wit and fire; he was a poet in whom were quint-essentialized the elements of the Vernacular Genius, in whose work the effects and the traditions of the Vernacular School, which had struggled back into being in the Kirk's despite, were repeated with surpassing brilliancy; and in the matter of the Kirk he did for the people a piece of service equal and similar to that which was done on other lines and in other spheres by Hutcheson and Hume and Adam Smith. He was apostle and avenger as well as maker. He did more than give Scotland songs to sing and rhymes to read: he showed that laughter and the joy of life need be no crimes, and that freedom of thought and sentiment and action is within the reach of him that will stretch forth his hand to take it. He pushed his demonstration to extremes; often his teaching has been grossly misread and misapprehended; no doubt, too, he died of his effort—and himself. But most men do as they must—not as they will. It was Burns's destiny, as it was Byron's in his turn, to be 'the passionate and dauntless soldier of a forlorn hope'; and if he fell in mid-assault, he found, despite the circumstances of his passing, the best death man can find. He had faults and failings not a few. But he was ever a leader among men; and if the manner of his leading were not seldom reckless, and he did some mischief, and gave the Fool a great deal of what passes for good Scripture for his folly, it will be found in the long-run that he led for truth—the truth which 'maketh free'; so that the Scotland he loved so well and took such pride in honouring could scarce have been the Scotland she is, had he not been.

I

His father, William Burness (or Burnes), and his mother, Agnes Brown, came both of yeoman stock: native the one to Kincardineshire, the other to Ayrshire. William Burness began life as a gardener, and was plying his trade in the service of one Fergusson, the then Provost of Ayr, when, with a view to setting up for himself, he took a lease of seven acres in the parish of Alloway, with his own hands built a two-roomed clay cottage—(still standing, but in use as a Burns Museum)—and in the December of 1757 married Agnes Brown, his junior by eleven years. She was red-haired, dark-eyed, square-browed, well-made, and quick-tempered. He was swarthy and thin; a man of strong sense, a very serious mind, the most vigilant affections, and a piety not even the Calvinism in which he had been reared could ever make brooding and inhumane. And in the clay cottage to which he had taken his new-married wife, Robert, the first of seven children, was born to them on the 25th January 1759.

1 In times of storm, he would seek out and stay with his daughter, where she was herding in the fields, because he knew that she was afraid of lightning; or, when it was fair, to teach her the names of plants and flowers. He wrote a little theological treatise for his children's guidance, too, and was, it is plain, an exemplary father, and so complete a husband that there is record of but a single unpleasantness between him and Agnes his wife.
The Scots peasant lived hard, toiled incessantly, and fed so cheaply that even on high days and holidays his diet (as set forth in The Blithesome Bridal) consisted largely in preparations of meal and vegetables and what is technically known as 'offal.' But the Scots peasant was a creature of the Kirk; the noblest ambition of Knox\(^1\) was an active influence in the Kirk; and the Parish Schools enabled the Kirk to provide its creatures with such teaching as it deemed desirable. William Burness was 'a very poor man' (R. B.). But he had the right tradition; he was a thinker and an observer; he read whatever he could get to read; he wrote English formally but with clarity;\(^2\) and he did the very best he could for his children in the matter of education. Robert went to school at

\(^1\) The Reformer had a vast deal more in common with Burns than with the 'sour John Knox' of Browning's ridiculous verses. He was the man of a crisis, and a desperate one; and he played his part in it like the stark and fearless opposite that he was. But he was a humourist, he loved his glass of wine, he abounded in humanity and intelligence, he married two wives, he was as well beloved as he was extremely hated and feared. He could not foresee what the collective stupidity of posterity would make of his teaching and example, nor how the theocracy at whose establishment he aimed would presently assert itself as largely a system of parochial inquisitions. The minister's man who had looked through his keyhole would have got short shrift from him; and in the Eighteenth Century he had as certainly stood with Burns against the Kirk of Scotland, as represented by Auld and Russell and the like, as in the Sixteenth he stood with Moray and the nobles against the Church of Rome, as figured in David Beaton and the 'twa infernal monstris, Pride and Avarice.'

\(^2\) See the aforesaid treatise:—'A Manual of Religious Belief, in a Dialogue between Father and Son, compiled by William Burnes, farmer at Mount Oliphant, and transcribed, with grammatical corrections, by John Murdoch, teacher.'
six;¹ and in the May of the same year (1765) a lad of eighteen, one John Murdoch, was 'engaged by Mr. Burness and four of his neighbours to teach, and accordingly began to teach, the little school at Alloway': his 'five employers' undertaking to board him 'by turns, and to make up a certain salary at the end of the year,' in the event of his 'quarterly payments' not amounting to a specified sum. He was an intelligent pedagogue—he had William Burness behind him—especially in the matter of grammar and rhetoric; he trained his scholars to a full sense of the meaning and the value of words; he even made them 'turn verse into its natural prose order,' and 'substitute synonymous expressions for poetical words and . . . supply all the ellipses.'² One of his school-books was the Bible, another Masson's Collection of Prose and Verse, excerpted from Addison³ and Steele and Dryden,

¹ 'I was a good deal noted at these years,' says the Letter to Moore, 'for a retentive memory, a stubborn, sturdy something in my disposition, and an enthusiastic idiot-piety . . . . In my infant and boyish days, too, I owed much to an old maid of my mother's, remarkable for her ignorance, credulity, and superstition,' who had, 'I suppose, the largest collection in the county of tales and songs concerning devils, ghosts, fairies, brownies, witches, warlocks, spunkies, kelpies, elf-candles, death-lights, wraiths, apparitions, cantraips, enchanted towers, giants, dragons, and other trumpery. This cultivated the latent seeds of Poesy,' etc.

² As Robert Louis Stevenson has remarked (Some Aspects of Robert Burns):—'We are surprised at the prose style of Robert; that of Gilbert need surprise us no less.'

³ 'The earliest thing of composition I recollect taking pleasure in, was The Vision of Mirza, and a hymn of Addison's beginning, "How are thy servants blessed, O Lord,"' (R. B., Letter to Moore). 'The first two books,' he adds, 'I ever read in private, and which gave me more pleasure than any two books I ever read again, were the Life of Hannibal and the History of Sir William from Thomson and Shenstone, Mallet and Henry Mackenzie, with Gray's Elegy, scraps from Hume and Robertson, and scenes from Romeo and Juliet, Othello, and Hamlet. And one effect of his method was that Robert, according to himself, 'was absolutely a critic in substantives, verbs, and participles,' and, according to Gilbert, 'soon became remarkable for the fluency and correctness of his expression, and read the few books that came in his way with much pleasure and improvement.' It is very characteristic of Murdoch that when, his school being broken up, he came to take leave of William Burness at Mount Oliphant, 'he brought us,' Gilbert says, 'a present and memorial of him, a small English grammar and the tragedy of Titus Andronicus,' and that 'by way of passing the evening' he 'began to read the play aloud.' Not less characteristic of all concerned was the effect of his reading. His hearers melted into tears at the tale of Lavinia's woes, and, 'in an agony of distress,' implored him to read no more. Ever sensible and practical, William Burness remarked that, as nobody wanted to hear the play, Murdoch need not leave it. Robert—ever a sentimentalist and ever an indifferent Shakespearean,\(^1\)

Wallace. Hannibal gave my young ideas such a turn that I used to strut in raptures up and down after the recruiting drum and bag-pipe, and wish myself tall enough that I might be a soldier; while the story of Wallace poured a Scottish prejudice in my veins which will boil along there (sic) till the floodgates of life shut in eternal rest.'

1 If we may judge him from his extant work. Cf. the absurd line:—

'Here Douglas forms wild Shakespeare into plan.'

He cribs but once from Shakespeare, and the happiest among his Robert replied that, if it was left, he would burn it. And Murdoch, ever the literary guide, philosopher, and friend, was so much affected by his pupil's 'sensibility,' that 'he left The School for Love (translated, I think, from the French) in Shakespeare's place. At this time Burns had but some two and a half years of Murdoch. William Burness liked and believed in the young fellow; for when, still urged by the desire to better his children's chance, he turned from gardening to cultivation on a larger scale, and took, at a £40 rental, the farm of Mount Oliphant, his two sons went on with Murdoch at Alloway, some two miles off. The school once broken up, however, Robert and his brother fell few quotations is prefixed to one of the most felicitous—and therefore the least publishable—of his tributes to the Light-heeled Muse. 'Sing me a bawdy song,' he says with Sir John Falstaff, 'to make us merry.' And he adds this note, in which he is Shakespearean once again:—'There is—there must be some truth in original sin. My violent propensity to b—dy convinces me of it. Lack a day! If that species of composition be the special sin never-to-be-forgotten in this world nor in that which is to come, then I am the most offending soul alive. Mair for token,' etc. (R. B. to Cleghorn, 25th October 1793).

1 There is no trace of any School for Love. It is therefore probable that what Gilbert meant was The School for Lovers: 'A Comedy. As it is acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. By William Whitehead, Esq.; Poet Laureat. London: Printed for R. and J. Dodsley in Pall-Mall; and sold by J. Hinxman, in Paternoster-row. MDCCLXII.' The first sentence of the author's Advertisement runs thus:—'The following Comedy is formed on a plan of Monsieur de Fontenelle's, never intended for the stage, and printed in the eighth volume of his works, under the title of Le Testament.' The names of the chief 'persons represented' are Sir John Dorilant, Modely, Belmour, Lady Beverley, Celia, and Araminta: an unlikely lot, one would say, for an Ayrshire farmstead, even though it sheltered the youthful Burns.
into their father’s hands, and, for divers reasons, Gilbert says, ‘we rarely saw anybody but the members of our own family,’ so that ‘my father was for some time the only companion we had.’ It will scarce be argued now that this sole companionship was wholly good for a couple of lively boys; but it is beyond question that it was rather good than bad. For, ‘he conversed on all subjects with us familiarly, as if we had been men,’ and further, ‘was at great pains, as we accompanied him in the labours of the farm, to lead the conversation to such subjects as might tend to increase our knowledge or confirm our virtuous habits.’ Also, he got his charges books—a Geographical Grammar, a Physico and Astro-Theology, Stackhouse’s History of the Bible; Ray’s Wisdom of God in the Creation; and these books Robert read ‘with an avidity and industry scarcely to be equalled.’ None, says Gilbert, ‘was so voluminous as to slacken his industry or so antiquated as to damp his research’: with the result that he was n’t very far on in his

1 Robert’s list (Letter to Moore) includes Guthrie and Salmon’s Geographical Grammar; The Spectator; Pope; ‘some plays of Shakespear’ (acting editions? or odd volumes?); ‘Tull and Dickson on Agriculture’; The Pantheon; Locke On the Human Understanding; Stackhouse; with ‘Justice’s British Gardener, Boyle’s Lectures, Allan Ramsay’s Works, Dr. Taylor’s Scripture Doctrine of Original Sin, A Select Collection of English Songs, and Harvey’s Meditations.’ Later he knew Thomson, Shenstone, Beattie, Goldsmith, Gray, Fergusson, Spenser even: with The Tea-Table Miscellany and many another song-book, Adam Smith’s Theory of the Moral Sentiments, Reid’s Inquiry into the Human Mind, Bunyan, Boston (The Fourfold State), Shakespeare, John Brown’s Self-Interpreting Bible, and The Wealth of Nations, which last he is found reading (at Ellisland) with a sense of wonder that so much wit should be contained between
'teens ere he had 'a competent knowledge of ancient history,' with 'something of geography, astronomy and natural history.' Then, owing to the mistake of an uncle, who went to Ayr to buy a Ready Reckoner or Tradesman's Sure Guide, together with a Complete Letter-Writer, but came back with 'a collection of letters by the most eminent writers,' he was moved by 'a strong desire to excel in letter-writing.' At thirteen or fourteen he was sent ('week about' with Gilbert) to Dalrymple Parish School to better his hand-writing; 'about this time' he fell in with Pamela, Fielding, Hume, Robertson, and the best of Smollett; and 'about this time' Murdoch set up as a schoolmaster in Ayr, and 'sent us Pope's Works and some other poetry, the first that we had an opportunity of reading, excepting what is contained in the English Collection and in the volume of the Edinburgh Magazine for 1772.' The summer after the boards of a single book. One favourite novel was Tristram Shandy; another, the once renowned, now utterly forgotten Man of Feeling. At Ellisland, again, he is found ordering the works of divers dramatists—as Jonson, Wycherley, Molière—with a view to reading and writing for the stage. But you find no trace of them in his work; nor is there any evidence to show that he could ever have written a decent play, though there is plenty of proof that he could not. No doubt, The Jolly Beggars will be quoted against me here. But the essential interests of that masterpiece are character and description. Now, there go many more things to the making of a play than character, while as for description, the less a play contains of that the better for the play.

1 The English Collection I take to be Masson's aforesaid. At all events I can find no other. So far as verse is concerned, another exception was found in 'those Excellent new Songs that are hawked about the country in baskets or spread on stalls in the streets' (G. B.). They were probably as interesting to Robert as Pope's Works or the poetry in The Edinburgh Magazine. At the writing-lessons at Dalrymple, Robert spent three weeks with Murdoch at Ayr, one over the English Grammar, the others over the rudiments of French. The latter language he was presently able to read, for the reason that Murdoch would go over to Mount Oliphant on half-holidays, partly for Robert's sake and partly for the pleasure of talking with Robert's father. Thus was Robert schooled; and 'tis plain that in one, and that an essential particular, he and his brother were exceptionally fortunate in their father and in the means he took to train them.

In another respect—one of eminent importance—their luck was nothing like so good. Mount Oliphant was made up of 'the poorest land in Ayrshire'; William Burness had started it on a borrowed hundred; he was soon in straits; only by unremitting diligence and the strictest economy could he hope to make ends meet; and the burden of hard work lay heavy on the whole family—heavier, as I think, on the growing lads than on any rate, his first essays in song were imitated from them, and he had the trick of them, when he listed, all his life long.

Currie saw his Molière at Dumfries. There is no question but he would have got on excellent well with Argan and Jourdain and Pourceaugnac; but could he have found much to interest him in Arnolphe and Agnès, in Philinte and Alceste and Célimène? I doubt it. On the other hand, he would certainly have loved the _flon-flons_ which Collé wrote for the Regent's private theatre; and I have always regretted that he knew nothing of La Fontaine—especially the La Fontaine of the _Contes_: a Scots parallel to which he was exactly fitted to imagine and achieve.

Robert mastered, besides, the first six books of Euclid, and even dabbled a little in Latin now and then: reverting to his rudiments (says Gilbert) when he was crossed in love, or had tiffed with his sweetheart.
the made man and woman. 'For several years,' says Gilbert, 'butcher's meat was a stranger to the house.' Robert was his father's chief hand at fifteen—'for we kept no hired servant'—and could afterwards describe his life at this time as a combination of 'the cheerless gloom of a hermit with the unceasing toil of a galley-slave.' The mental wear was not less than the physical strain: for William Burness grew old and broken, and his family was seven strong, and of money there was as little as there seemed of hope. The wonder is, not that Robert afterwards broke out but, that Robert did not then break down: that he escaped with a lifelong tendency to vapours and melancholia, and at the time of trial itself with that 'dull headache' of an evening, which 'at a future period . . . was exchanged,' says Gilbert, 'for a palpitation of the heart and a threatening of fainting and suffocation in his bed in the night-time.' William Burness is indeed a pathetic figure; but to me the Robert of Mount Oliphant is a figure more pathetic still. Acquired or not, stoicism was habitual with the father. With the son it was not so much as acquired; for in that son was latent a world of appetites and forces and potentialities the reverse of stoical. And, even had this not been: if Robert hadn't proved a man of genius, with the temperament which genius sometimes entails: he must still have been the worse for the experience. He lived in circumstances of unwonted harshness and bitterness for a lad of his degree; with a long misery of anticipation, he must endure a quite unnatural strain on forming muscle and on nerves and a brain yet immature; he had perforce to face the necessity of diverting an absolute example of the artistic temperament to laborious and squalid ends, and to assist in the repression of all those natural instincts—of sport and reverie and companionship—the fostering of which is for most boys, have they genius or have they not, an essential process of development; and the experience left him with stooping shoulders and a heavy gait, an ineradicable streak of sentimentalism, what he himself calls 'the horrors of a diseased nervous system,' and that very practical exultation in the joie de vivre, once it was known, which, while it is brilliantly expressed in much published and unpublished verse and prose, is nowhere, perhaps, so naively signified as in a pleasant parenthesis addressed, years after Mount Oliphant, to the highly respectable Thomson:—'Nothing since a Highland wench in the Cowgate once bore me three bastards at a birth has surprised me more than,' etc. The rest is not to my purpose: which is to argue that, given Robert Burns and the apprenticeship at Mount Oliphant, a violent reaction was inevitable, and that one's admiration for him is largely increased by the reflection that it came no sooner than it did. William Burness knew that it must come; for, as he lay dying, he confessed that it troubled him to think of Robert's future. This, to be sure, was not at Mount Oliphant: when Robert had done no worse than insist on going to a dancing-school: but years after, at Lochlie, when Robert had begun to assert himself. True it is that at Kirkoswald—a smuggling village, whither he went, at seventeen, to study mensuration, 'dialling,' and the like—he had learned, he says,
'to look unconcernedly on a large tavern bill and mix without fear in a drunken squabble.' True it is, too, that at Lochlie the visible reaction had set in. But, so far as is known, that reaction was merely formal; and one may safely conjecture that, as boys are not in the habit of telling their fathers everything, William Burness knew little or nothing of those gallant hours at Kirkoswald. Be this as it may, he seems to have discerned, however dimly and vaguely, some features of the prodigious creature he had helped into the world; and that he should not have discerned them till thus late is of itself enough to show how stern and how effectual a discipline Mount Oliphant had proved.

II

The Mount Oliphant period lasted some twelve years, and was at its hardest for some time ere it reached its term. 'About 1775 my father's generous master died,'¹ says Robert; and 'to clench the curse we fell into the hands of a factor, who sat for the picture² I have drawn of one in my tale of "Twa Dogs." . . . My father's spirit was soon irritated, but not easily broken. There was a free-

¹ This was that Fergusson (of Ayr) in whose service William Burness had been at the time of his marriage with Agnes Brown, and (apparently) for some years after it—in fact, till he took on Mount Oliphant. This he did on a hundred pounds borrowed from his old employer; and one may conjecture that the legal proceedings which Robert thus resented were entailed upon Fergusson's agents by the work of winding up the estate.

² 'Sat for the picture I have drawn of one' is precise and definite enough. But surely the Factor verses in The Twa Dogs dom in his lease in two years more, and to weather these we re trenched expenses—to the purpose and with the effect denoted! Then came easier times. In 1777 William Burness removed his family to Lochlie, a hundred-and-thirty-acre farm, in Tarbolton Parish. 'The nature of the bargain,' Robert wrote to Moore, 'was such as to throw a little ready money in his hand in the commencement,' or 'the affair would have been impracticable.' At this place, he adds, 'for four years we lived comfortably'; and at this place his gay and adventurous spirit began to free itself, his admirable talent for talk to find fit opportunities for exercise and display. The reaction set in, as I have said, and he took life as gallantly as his innocency might, wore the only tied hair in the parish, was recognisable from afar by his fillemot plaid, was made a 'Free and Accepted Mason,' founded a Bachelors' Club, and are less a picture than a record of proceedings, a note on the genus Factor:—

'He'll stamp and threaten, curse and swear,
He'll apprehend them, poin'd their gear,
While they must stand, wi' aspect humble,
An' hear it a', and fear and tremble.'

The statement is accurate enough, no doubt, but where is the 'picture'? Compare the effect of any one of Chaucer's Pilgrims, or the sketches of Caesar and Luath themselves, and the Factor as individual is found utterly wanting.

1 Burns was always an enthusiastic Mason. The Masonic idea—whatever that he—went home to him; and in honour of the Craft he wrote some of his poorest verses. One set, the 'Adieu, Adieu,' etc., of the Kilmarnock Volume, was popular outside Scotland. At all events, I have seen a parody in a Belfast chap which is set to the tune of Burns's Farewell.

2 It was, in fact, part drinking-club and part debating-society. But Rule X. of its constitution insisted that every member must took to sweethearting with all his heart and soul and strength. He had begun with a little harvester at fifteen; and at Kirkoswald he had been enamoured of Peggy Thomson to the point of sleepless nights. Now, says his brother Gilbert, 'he was constantly the victim of some fair enslaver'—sometimes of two or three at a time; and 'the symptoms of his passion were often such as nearly to equal those of the celebrated Sappho,' so that 'the agitation of his mind and body exceeded anything I know in real life.' Such, too, was the quality of what he himself was pleased to call 'un penchant à (sic) l'adorable moitié du genre humain,' in combination with that 'particular jealousy' he had of people that were richer than himself, or who had more consequence in life,' that a plain face was quite as good as a pretty one: especially and particularly if it belonged to a maid of a lower degree than his own. To condescend upon one's women—to some men that is an ideal. It was certainly the ideal of Robert Burns. 'His love,' says Gilbert, 'rarely settled upon persons of this description'—that is, persons 'who were richer than himself, or who had more consequence in life.' He must still be Jove—still stoop from Olympus to the plain. Apparently he held it was an honour to be admired by him; and when a short while hence (1786) he ventured to celebrate, in rather too realistic a strain, the Lass of Ballochmyle, and was rebuffed for his impertinence—(it was so felt in those unregenerate days!)—he was, 'tis said, extremely mortified. In the meanwhile, his loves, whether plain or pretty, were goddesses all; and the Sun was 'entering Virgo, a month which is always a carnival in my imagination' the whole year round; and the wonder is that he got off so little of it all in verse which he thought too good for the fire. Rhyme he did (of course), and copiously: as at this stage every coming male must rhyme, who has instinct enough to 'couple but love and dove.' But it was not till the end of the Lochlie years that he began rhyming to any purpose. Indeed, the poverty of the Lochlie years is scarce less 'wonderful past all whooping' than the fecundity of certain memorable months at Mauchline: especially if it be true, as Gilbert and himself aver, that the Lochlie love-affairs were 'governed by the strictest rules of modesty and virtue, from which he never deviated till his twenty-third year.'

1 Saunders Tait, the Tarbolton poetaster, insists that, long before Mossgiel, Burns and Sillar—'Davie, a Brother Æ Poet'—were the most incontinent youngsters in Tarbolton Parish; and, after asseverating, in terms as solemn as he can make them, that in all Scotland

'There's none like you and Burns can tout
The bawdy horn,'

goes on to particularise, and declares that, what with 'Moll and Meg,

Jean, Sue, and Lizzey, a' decoy't,
There's sax wi' egg.'

Worse than all, he indites a 'poem,' a certain B—ns in his Infancy, which begins thus:— rather good than bad, as surely as fruition leaves verses, whether bad or good, unmade.

It was natural and honourable in a young man of this lusty and amatorious habit to look round for a wife and to cast about him for a better means of keeping one than farm-service would afford. In respect of the first he found a possibility in Ellison Begbie, a Galston farmer's daughter, at this time a domestic servant, on whom he wrote (they say) his 'Song of Similes,' and to whom he addressed some rather stately, not to say pedantic, documents in the form of love-letters. For the new line in life, he determined that it might, perhaps, be flax-dressing; so, at the midsummer of 1781 (having just before been sent about his business by, as he might himself have said, 'le doux objet de son attachement') he removed to Irvine, a little port on the Firth of Clyde, which was also a centre of the industry in which he hoped to excel. Here he established himself, on what terms is not known, with one Peacock, whom he afterwards took occa-

Because he made a song on me,
And let the world look and see,
Just wi' my tongue,
How he and Clootie did agree
When he was young':—

and of which I shall quote no more. But Robert and his brother are both explicit on this point; and, despite the easy morals of the class in which the Bard sought now and ever 'to crown his flame,' it must be held, I think, as proven that he was dëniaisë by Richard Brown at Irvine and by Betty Paton at Lochlie.

This is the place to say that I owe my quotations from Saunders Tait to Dr. Grosart, who told me of the copy (pro-sion to describe as 'a scoundrel of the first water, who made money by the mystery of Thieving';¹ here he saw something more of life and character and the world than he had seen at Mount Oliphant and Lochlie; here, at the year’s end, he had a terrible attack of vapours (it lasted for months, he says, so that he shuddered to recall the time); here, above all, he formed a friendship with a certain Richard Brown. According to him, Brown, being the son of a mechanic, had taken the eye of 'a great man in the neighbourhood,' and had received ⁰ bahly unique) of that worthy's Poems and Songs: 'Printed for and Sold by the Author Only, 1796': in the Mitchell Library, Glasgow, and at the same time communicated transcripts which he had made from such numbers in it as referred to Burns. As my collaborator, Mr. T. F. Henderson, was then in Scotland, I asked him to look up Tait's volume. It was found at last, after a prolonged search; was duly sent to the Burns Exhibition; and in a while was pronounced 'a discovery.' Tait, who was pedlar, tailor, soldier in turn, had a ribald and scurrilous tongue, a certain rough cleverness, and a good enough command of the vernacular; so that his tirades against Burns—(he was one of the very few who dared to attack that satirist)—are still readable, apart from the interest which attaches to their theme. It is a pity that some Burns Club or Burns Society has not reprinted them in full, coarse as they are.

'a genteel education, with a view to bettering his situation in life.' His patron had died, however, and he had had perforce to go for a sailor (he was afterwards captain of a West-Indiaman). He had known good luck and bad, he had seen the world, he had the morals of his calling, at the same time that 'his mind was fraught with courage, independtrue Burns—the Burns of the good years: proud, generous, whole-hearted, essentially natural and humane—thrills from the first line to the last. And we have to recall the all-important fact, that Burns was first and last a peasant,¹ and first and last a peasant in revolt against the Kirk, a peasant resolute to be a buck, to forgive the really scandalous contrast presented in those versions of the affair—(versions done in the true buckish style: the leer and the grin and the slang in full blast)—which he has given in The Fornicator, the Epistle to John Rankine, and—apparently—the Reply to a Trimming Epistle from a Tailor. At the same time we must clearly understand that we recall all this for the sake of our precious selves, and not in any way, nor on any account, for the sake of Burns. He was absolutely of his station and his time; the poor-living, lewd, grimy, free-spoken, ribald, old Scots peasant-world² came to a full, brilliant, even majestic close in his work; and, if we would appreciate aright the environment in which he wrote, and the audience to which such writings were addressed, we must transliterate into the Vernacular Brantôme and the Dames Galantes and Tallemant and the Historiettes. As for reading rejoicings in the fact of paternity were absolutely sincere throughout his life.

¹ Here and elsewhere the word is used, not opprobriously but, literally. Burns was specifically a peasant, as Byron was specifically a peer, and as Shakespeare was specifically a man of the burgess class.

² I do not, of course, forget its many solid and admirable virtues; but its elements were mixed, and it was to the grosser that the Burns of these and other rhymes appealed.
them in Victorian terms—Early-Victorian terms, or Late—that way madness lies: madness, and a Burns that by no process known to gods or men could ever have existed save in the lubber-land of some Pious Editor's dream.

At Lochlie, whither he seems to have returned in the March of 1782, the studious years\(^1\) and the old comparative prosperity had come, or were coming, to a close. There had been a quarrel between William Burness and his landlord, one M'Clure, a merchant in Ayr; and this quarrel, being about money, duly passed into the Courts. Its circumstances are obscure; but it is history that arbitration went against the tenant of Lochlie, that he was ordered to 'quite possession,' that he was strongly suspected of 'preparing himself accordingly by dispossessing of his stock and crops,' and that a certain 'application at present craving' resulted, on shrieval authority, in the 'sequestration' of all the Lochlie stock and plenishing and gear. Whatever the rights and wrongs of the affair, an end came to it with the end of William Burness. By this time his health was broken—he was far gone in what Robert calls 'a phthisical consumption'; and he died in the February of the next year (1784), when, as the same Robert romantically puts it in his fine, magniloquent fashion, 'his all went among the rapacious hell-hounds that growl in the Kennel of Justice.'\(^2\)

\(^1\) It was parish gossip that, if you called on William Burness at meal-time, you found the whole family with a book in one hand and a horn spoon in the other.

\(^2\) M'Clure's 'answers' and 'counter-answers,' together with the sheriff's officer's account of the seizure at Lochlie, were published
Gilbert were able (Martinmas 1783), when their father's affairs were 'drawing to a crisis,' to secure another farm—Mossgiel—in Mauchline Parish, some two or three miles off Lochlie, is enough to show that neither errors nor crosses, neither sequestrations nor lampoons, had impaired the family credit.

III

William Burness had paid his children wages during his tenancy of Lochlie; and the elder four, by presenting themselves as his creditors for wages due, were enabled to secure a certain amount of 'plenishing in The Glasgow Herald early in the present year (1897). I need scarce say that Saunders Tait produced a Burns at Lochly, in which he fell on his enemy tooth and claw. His statements are as specific as M'Clure's, and are substantially in agreement with some of them, besides:—

'To Lochly ye came like a clerk,
   And on your back was scarce a sark,
   The dogs did at your buttocks bark,
   But now ye're bra',

   Ye pock't the rent, ye was sae stark,
   Made payment sma'.'

In another stanza, 'M'Clure,' he says—

'Ye scarcely left a mite
   To fill his horn.
   You and the Lawyers gied him a skyte,
   Sold a' his corn.'

In a third he appears to record the particulars of a single combat between Robert and his father's landlord:—

'His ain gun at him he did cock,
   An' never spared,
   Wi' owre his heid came a clean knock
   Maist killed the laird.'

And in the last of all, after bitterly reproaching Robert and the whole Burns race with ingratitude:—
and gear’ wherewith to make a start at Mossgiel. It was a family venture, in whose success the Burnesses were interested all and severally, and to which each one looked for food and clothes and hire (the brothers got a yearly fee of £7 apiece); and, as all were well and thoroughly trained in farming work, and had never lived other than sparcely, it was reasonable in them to believe that the enterprise would prosper. That it did not begin by prospering was no fault of Robert’s. He made excellent resolutions, and, what was more to the purpose, he kept them—for a time. He ‘read farming books’ (thus he displays himself), he ‘calculated crops,’ he ‘attended markets’; he worked hard in the fields, ‘M’Clure he put you in a farm,

And coft you coals your a—— to warm
   And meal and maut. . . .
He likewise did the maffin stock,
   And built you barns’:

he sets forth explicitly this charge:—

‘M’Clure’s estate has ta’en the fever,
And heal again it will be never,
The vagabonds, they ca’ you clever,
Ye ’re sic a sprite,
To rive fra’ him baith ga’ and liver,
   And baith the feet.’

The fact of the Laird’s generosity is reaffirmed with emphasis in \textit{A Compliment}:

‘The horse, corn, pets, kail, kye, and ewes,
Cheese, pease, beans, rye, wool, house and flours,
Pots, pans, crans, tongs, hran-spits, and skewrs,
The milk and harm,
Each thing they had was a’ M’Clure’s,
   He stock’d the farm.’ . . .

And with the remark that ‘Five hundred pounds they were behind,’ the undaunted Saunders brings his libel to a close.
he kept his body at least in temperance and soberness, and, as for thrift, there is Gilbert's word for it, that his expenses never exceeded his income of £7 a year. It availed him nothing. Gilbert is said to have been rather a theorist than a sound practitioner; and Robert, though a skilled farmer, cared nothing for business, and left him a free hand in the conduct of affairs. Luck, too, was against them from the first; and very soon the elder's genius was revealed to him, and he had other than farmer's work to do. 'In spite of the Devil,' he writes, 'the world, and the flesh, I believe I should have been a wise man; but the first year, from unfortunately buying in bad seed, the second, from a late harvest, we lost half of both our crops.' Naturally, 'this' (and some other things) 'overset all my wisdom, and I returned, "like the dog to his vomit"—(be it remembered, it is Robert Burns who speaks: not I)—"and the sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire."' That the confession, with its rather swaggering allusion to the Armour business, was true, is plain. But we do not need Burns's assurance to know that, though he could do his work, and prided himself on the straightness of his furrows, he was scarce cut out for a successful farmer—except, it may be, in certain special conditions. Endurance, patience, diligence, a devout attention to one's own interest and the land's, an indomitable constancy in labour to certain ends and in thought on certain lines—these are some of the qualities which make the husbandman; and, this being so, how should Mossgiel have prospered under Rab the Ranter? His head was full of other things than crops and cattle. He was bursting with intelligence, ideas, the consciousness of capacity, the desire to take his place among men; and in Mauchline he found livelier friends and greater opportunities than he had found elsewhere. Being a Scot, he was instinctively a theologian; being himself, he was inevitably liberal-minded; born a peasant of genius, and therefore a natural rebel, he could not choose but quarrel with the Kirk—especially as her hand was heavy on his friends and himself,—and it was as a Mauchline man that the best of his anti-clerical work was done.

1 As his landlord, the lawyer Gavin Hamilton, to whom he dedicated the Kilmarnock Volume, and the story of whose wrangle with the Mauchline Kirk-Session (see Vol. i. pp. 147-152, 188, 378-9, etc.) is to some extent that of Burns's assault upon the Kirk (see Vol. ii. Holy Willie's Prayer, pp. 25-30, and Notes, pp. 320-324). Another was Robert Aiken, also a lawyer, by whom he was 'read into fame,' to whom he dedicated The Cotter's Saturday Night, and whom he celebrated in an Epitaph (Vol. i. p. 188). Yet another was Richmond, the lawyer's clerk, whose room he was afterwards to share in Edinburgh, and who appears to have partly responsible for the preservation of The Jolly Beggars. Again, there was the Bachelors' Club, on the model of that he had founded at Tarbolton, for whose edification, and in explanation of whose function, he appears to have written The Fornicator and The Court of Equity. This last is Burns's idea of what the proceedings of the Kirk-Session ought, in certain cases, to have been. It is capital fun, but something too frank and too particular for latter-day print.

2 He was ever a theological liberal and a theological disputant—a champion of Heterodoxy, in however mild a form, whose disputations made him notorious, so that his name was as a stumbling-block and an offence to the Orthodox. For the series of attacks which he delivered against the Kirk—The Holy Fair, the Address to the Deil, The Twa Herds, The Ordination, Holy Willie, The Kirk's Alarm, the Epistles To the Unco Guid and To John Goldie—see Vols. i. and ii. (Text and Notes). There is no record of an appearance on the stool with Paton; but the circumstances of this his initial difficulty appear to be set

VOL. IV.
Then, too, he was full of rhymes, and they must out of him: his call had come, and he fell to obeying it with unexampled diligence. More than all, perhaps, he had the temperament of the viveur—the man who rejoices to live his life; and his appetites had been intensified, his gift of appreciation made abnormal (so to say), by a boyhood and an adolescence of singular hardship and quite exceptional continence. It is too late in the world’s history to apologise for the primordial instinct; and to do so at any time were sheer impertinence and unreasoning ingratitude. To apologise in the case of a man who so exulted in its manifestations and results, and who so valiantly, not to say riotously, insisted on the fact of that exultation, as Robert Burns, were also a rank and frank absurdity. On this point he makes doubt impossible. The ‘white flower of a blameless life’ was never a button-hole for him:

forth in the Epistle to Rankine (i. 155) and the Reply to a Trimming Epistle (ii. 96), with the Notes thereto appended. All these read, considered, and digested, what interest remains in Burns’s quarrel with the Kirk consists in the fact that, being a person naturally and invincibly opposed to the ‘sour-featured Whiggism’ on which the Stuarts had wrecked themselves, Burns was naturally and invincibly a Jacobite. His Jacobitism was, he said, ‘by way of vive la bagatelle.’ He told Ramsay of Auchtertyre that he owed it to the plundering and unhousing (1715) of his grandfather, who was gardener to Earl Marischal at Inveraray. But it came to him mainly through Gavin Hamilton (who was Episcopalian by descent) and his own resentment of clerical tyranny.

1 It is true that he wrote thus ‘To a Young Friend’:

’The sacred lowe o’ weel-plac’d love,
   Luxuriantly indulge it;
But never tempt th’ illicit rove,
   Tho’ naething should divulge it:’
are there to show that he would have disdained the presumption that it ever could have been. And it is from Mauchline, practically, that, his affair with Betty Paton over and done with, and, to anticipate a little, his affair with Jean Armour left hanging in the wind, he starts on his career as amorist at large.

And now for a little narrative. In the November of 1784 Elizabeth Paton bore him a daughter: 'the First Instance,' so he wrote above his Welcome, 'that entitled him to the Venerable Appellation of Father.' The mother is described as 'very plain-looking,' but of 'an exceedingly handsome figure'; 'rude and uncultivated to a great degree,' with a 'strong masculine understanding, and a thorough, though unwomanly, contempt for any sort of refinement'; withal, 'so active, honest, and independent a creature' that Mrs. Burns would have had Robert marry her, but 'both my aunts and Uncle Gilbert opposed it,' in the belief that 'the faults of her character would soon have disgusted him.' There had been no promise on his part; and though the

I waive the quantum o' the sin,
The hazard of concealing;
But, och! it hardens a' within,
And petrifies the feeling!

But there is plenty to show that the writer was a great deal better at preaching than at practice. And he owns as much himself in his own epitaph:

'Is there a man, whose judgment clear
Can others teach the course to steer,
Yet runs, himself, life's mad career
Wild as the wave?

Here pause—and, thro' the starting tear,
Survey this grave.'
reporter (his niece, Isabella Begg) has his own sister's warrant—(Mrs. Begg, by the way, was rather what her brother, in a mood of acute fraternal piety, might possibly have called 'a bletherin' b—tch')—for saying that 'woman never loved man with a more earnest devotion than that poor woman did him,' he is nowise sentimentalized about her. She is identified with none of his songs; and while there is a pleasant reference to her in the Welcome:—

'Thy mither's person, grace, and merit':—

she is recognisably the 'patterick' of the Epistle to Rankine, she is certainly the heroine of The Fornicator, she probably does duty in the Reply to a Trimming Epistle, none of which pieces shows the writer's 'penchant à l'adorable,' etc., to advantage. No doubt, they were addressed to men. No doubt, too, they were, first and last, satirical impeachments of the Kirk: impeachments tinctured with the peasant's scorn of certain existing circumstances, and done with all the vigour and the furia which one particular peasant—a peasant who could see through shams and was intolerant of them—could with both hands bestow. And that the women did not resent their share in such things is shown by the fact that such things got done. It was 'the tune of the time'—in the peasant-world at least. Still, as Diderot says somewhere or other:—'On aime celle à qui on le donne, on est aimé de celle à qui on le prend.' And one can't help regretting that there are few or none but derisive references to Betty Paton in her lover's work.
Of vastly greater importance than his mistresses, at this or any period of his life, is the entity, which, with an odd little touch of Eighteenth Century formality, he loved to call his Muse. That entity was now beginning to take shape and substance as a factor in the sum of the world's happiness; and the coming of that other entity in whose existence he took so high a pride and so constant a delight—I mean 'the Bard'—was but a matter of time. Burns had been ever a rhymester; and Burns, who, as Stevenson observed, and as the Notes to these Volumes have shown, 'was always ready to borrow the hint of a design, as though he had some difficulty in commencing,' had begun by borrowing his style, as well as divers hints of designs, from stall-artists and neighbour-cuckoos. But, once emancipated, once a man, once practically assured of the primal concerns of life, once conscious that (after all) he might have the root of the matter in him, the merely local poet begins to waver and dislimn, and the Burns of Poor Mailie (written at Lochlie) and the Epistle to Davie reigns—intermittently, perhaps, but obviously—in his stead. It is all over with stall-artists and neighbour-cuckoos. Poor Fergusson's book 1 1 Robert Fergusson (1750–1774) was certainly a prime influence in Burns's poetical life. Nevertheless—or shall I say consequently?—he has had less than justice from the most of Burns's Editors. Yet in his way he was so remarkable a creature that there can be no question but in his death, at four-and-twenty, a great loss was inflicted on Scottish literature. He had intelligence and an eye, a right touch of humour, the gifts has fallen into his hands, and (as he says in his ridiculous way) has 'caused him to string anew his wildly-sounding rustic lyre with emulating vigour.' At last the hour of the Vernacular Muse has come; and he is hip to launch with such adepts in her mystery as the Sempills, and Hamilton of Gilbertfield, and Allan Ramsay, and Robert Fergusson, and the innominate whose verses, decent or not, have lived in his ear since childhood: catching their tone and their sentiment; mastering their rhythms; copying their methods; considering their effects in the one true language of his mind.\(^1\) He could write and observation and style, together with a true feeling for country and city alike; and his work in the Vernacular (his English verse is rubbish), with its easy expressiveness, its vivid and unshrinking realism, and a merit in the matter of character and situation which makes it—not readable only, but—interesting as art, at the same time that it is valuable as history, is nothing less than memorable: especially in view of the miserable circumstances—(the poor lad was a starveling scrubener, and died, partly of drink, in the public madhouse)—in which it was done. Burns, who learned much from Fergusson, was an enthusiast in his regard for him; bared his head and shed tears over 'the green mound and the scattered gowans\(^1\) under which he found his exemplar lying in Canongate Churchyard; got leave from the managers to put up a headstone at his own cost there, and wrote an epitaph to be inscribed upon it, one line of which—is somehow to be read in Gray's \textit{Elegy in a Country Churchyard}. Fergusson was as essentially an Edinburgh product—(the old Scots capital: gay, squalid, drunken, dirty, lettered, venerable: lives in his verses much as Burns knew it twelve years after his death)—as the late R. L. S. himself; and, while I write, old memories come back to me of the admiring terms: terms half-playful, half-affectionate: in which the later artist was wont to speak of his all but forgotten ancestor.

\['No storied urn nor animated bust,'\]

\(^1\) I do not forget that Dugald Stewart noted the correctness of his speech and the success with which he avoided the use of deliberate English, and, when he wanted to be not so much sincere as impressive and 'fine,' he wrote English deliberately, as the worse and weaker part of his achievement remains to prove. He could even write English, as Jourdain talked prose, 'without knowing it'—as we know from Scots Wha Hae. He read Pope, Shenstone, Beattie, Goldsmith, Gray, and the rest, with so much enthusiasm that one learned Editor has made an interesting little list of pilferings from the works of these distinguished beings. But, so far as I can see, he might have lived and died an English-writing Scot, and nobody been a thrill or a memory the better for his work. It is true that much of the Saturday Night and the Vision and the Mountain Daisy is written in English;¹ but one may take leave to

¹ He contrives a compromise, to admirable purpose, too, in Tam o' Shanter: which is written partly in English and partly in the Vernacular. But (1) Tam o' Shanter is in a rhythmus classical in Scotland since the time of Barbour's Bruce; (2) the English parts of Tam o' Shanter are of no particular merit as poetry—that is, 'the only words in the only order'; and (3) the best of Tam o' Shanter is in the Vernacular alone. Contrast, for instance, the diabolical fire and movement and energy of these lines:

'They reeled, they set, they cross'd, they cleekit,
 Till ilka carlin swat and reekit,
 And coost her duddies to the wark,
 And linket at it in her sark':

with another famous—perhaps too famous—passage:

'But pleasures are like poppies spread;
 You seize the flower, its bloom is shed,' etc.

In the second the result is merely Hudibrastic. In the first the wonder if these pieces, with so much else of Burns's own, would have escaped the 'iniquity of Oblivion;' had they not chanced, to their good fortune, to be accompanied with Halloween, and Holy Willie, and The Farmer to His Auld Mare, and a score of masterpieces besides, in which the Vernacular is carried to the highest level—in the matter of force and fire, and brilliancy of diction, and finality of effect, to name but these—it has ever reached in verse.¹ Let this be as it may: there can be no question that when Burns wrote English he wrote what, on his own confession, was practically a foreign

tongue—a tongue in which he, no more than Fergusson or Ramsay, could express himself to any sufficing purpose; but that, when he used the dialect which he had babbled in babyhood, and spoken as boy and youth and man—the tongue, too, in which the chief exemplars and the ruling influences of his poetical life had wrought—he at once revealed himself for its greatest master since Dunbar. More, much more, than that: his bearings once found, he marked his use of it by the discovery of a quantity hitherto unknown in literature. Himself, to wit: the amazing compound of style and sentiment with gaiety and sympathy, of wit and tender-

1 For that is what it comes to in the end. He may seem to have little to do with Catholic and Feudal Scotland, and as little with the Scotland of the Early Reformation and the First Covenant. Also, it is now impossible to say if he knew any more of Scott and Dunbar and the older makers (Davie Lindsay and Barbour excepted) than he found in The Ever Green, which Ramsay garbled out of The Bannatyne MS., if he were read in Pinkerton (1786), or if he got any more out of Gawain Douglas than the verse which serves as a motto to Tam o’ Shanter (which, after all, may have been found for him by some adept in old Scots poetry—Glenriddell or another). The Scotland he represents, and of which his verses are the mirror, is the Scotland out of which the ‘wild Whigs’ had crushed the taste for everything but fornication and theology and such expressions of derision and revolt as Jenny M’Craw and Errock Brae: the Scotland whose literary beginnings date, you’d fancy, not from Henryson, not from Dunbar and Douglas and the Lyon King-at-Arms, but from Sempill of Beltrees and the men who figure in the three issues of Watson’s Choice Collection. But Ramsay and his fellows were a revival—not a new birth. The Vernacular School is one and indivisible. There are breaks in the effect; but the tradition remains unbroken. And Burns, for all his comparative modernity, descends directly from, and is, in fact, the last of that noble line which begins with Robert Henryson.
ness with radiant humour and an admirable sense of art, which is Robert Burns.

He could write ill, and was capable of fustian. But, excepting in his ‘Epigrams’ and ‘Epitaphs’ and in his imitations of poets whose methods he did not understand, he was nearly always a great writer, and he was generally (to say the least) incapable of fustian in the Vernacular. In essaying the effects of Pope and Shenstone and those other unfamiliars, he was like a man with a personal hand set to imitate a writing-master’s copy: he made as good a shot as he could at it, but there was none of himself in the result. It was otherness work when he took on the methods and the styles in which his countrymen had approved themselves: these he could compass so well that he could far surpass his exemplars technically, and could adequately express the individual Burns besides. The Death and Dying Words of Poor Mailie (written at Lochlie, and therefore very early work) trace back to Gilbertfield’s Bonnie Hech; but the older piece is realistic in purpose and brutal in effect, while in the later—to say nothing of the farce in Hughoc—the whole philosophy of life of a decent mother-ewe is imagined with delightful humour, and set forth in terms so kindly in spirit and so apt in style, that the Death and Dying Words is counted one of the imperishables in English letters. Contrast, again, the Elegy, written some time after the Death and Dying Words, on this immortal beast, with its exemplars in Watson and Ramsay:

‘He was right nacky in his way,
An’ eydent baith be night and day;
He wi' the lads his part could play
When right sair faed,
He gart them good bull-sillar pay;
But now he's dead. . . .'

'Wha'll jow Ale on my drouthy Tongue,
To cool the heat of Lights and Lung?
Wha'll bid me, when the Kaile-bell's rung,
To Buird me speed? . . .
Wha'll set me by the Barrel-bung?
Since Sanny's dead? . . .'

'He was good Company at Jeists,
And wanton when he came to Feasts;
He scorn'd the Converse of great Beasts
[F]or a Sheep's-head;
He lugh at Stories about Ghasts—
Blyth Willie's dead':—

and you shall find the difference still more glaring.
Cleverness apart—cleverness and the touch of life,
the element of realism—the Laments for Hab Simson and Sanny Briggs, for John Cowper and Luckie Wood and the Writer Lithgow,¹ are merely squalid and cynical; while in every line the Elegy, in despite of realism and the humorous tone and intent

¹ All five, together with Ramsay's on Luckie Spence (an Edinburgh bawd) and Last Words of a Wretched Miser, should be read for the sake of their likeness, and at the same time their unlikeness, to not a little in Burns, and in illustration of the truth that the Vernacular tradition was one of humorous, and even brutal realism. I have cited R. L. S. in connexion with Fergusson.
He had a far higher esteem for that maker than he had for that maker's ancestor, Allan Ramsay. Yet he quoted to me one day a stanza from the John Cowper, a certain phrase in which—a phrase obscenely significant of death—was, we presently agreed, as good an example of 'the Squalid-Picturesque' as could be found out of Villon.
(essential to the models and therefore inevitable in the copy) is the work of a writer of genius, who is also a generous human being. Very early work, again, are Corn Rigs and Green Grow the Rashes; in suggestion, inspiration, technical quality, both are unalterably Scots; and in both the effect of mastery and completeness is of those that defy the touch of Time. To compare these two and any two of Burns's songs in English, or pseudo-English, is to realise that the poet of these two should never have ventured outside the pale of his supremacy. English had ten thousand secrets which he knew not, nor could ever have known, except imperfectly; for he recked not of those innumerable traditions, associations, connotations, surprises, as it were ambitions, which make up the romantic and the literary life of words—even as he was penetrated and possessed by the sense of any such elements as may have existed in the Vernacular. Thus, if he read Milton, it was largely, if not wholly, with a view to getting himself up as a kind of Tarbolton Satan. He was careless, so I must contend, of Shakespeare. With such knowledge as he could glean from song-books, he was altogether out of touch with the Elizabethans and the Carolines. Outside the Vernacular, in fact, he was a rather is significant. It is quite in the vein of Bonnie Heck, as indeed are the first four stanzas. But it would have ruined the Elegy as the world has known it since 1786.

unlettered Eighteenth Century Englishman, and the models which he must naturally prefer before all others were academic, stilted, artificial, and unexemplary to the highest point. It may be that I read the verse of Burns, and all Scots verse, with something of that feeling of 'preciousness' which everybody has, I take it, in reading a language, or a dialect, not his own: the feeling which blinds one to certain sorts of defect, and gives one an uncritical capacity for appreciating certain sorts of merit. However this be, I can certainly read my mother-tongue; and most Englishmen—with, I should imagine, many Scots—will agree with me in the wish that Burns, for all the brilliant compromise between Scots and English which is devised and done in Tam o' Shanter and elsewhere, had never pretended to a mastery which assuredly he had not, nor in his conditions ever could have had.

I have stressed this point because I wish to stress another, and with a view to making clear, and to setting in its proper perspective, the fact that, genius apart, Burns was, no miracle but, a natural development of circumstance and time. The fact is patent enough to all but them that, for a superstition's sake, insist on ignoring history, and decline to recognise the unchanging processes of natural and social Law. Without the achievement of Æschylus, there can be no such perfection as Sophocles: just as, that perfection achieved, the decline of Tragedy, as in Euripides, is but a matter of time. But for the Middle Ages and the reaction against the Middle Ages there could have been no Ronsard, no Rabelais, no Montaigne in France. Had there been no Surrey and no Marlowe, no Chaucer and no Ovid (to name no more than these in a hundred influences), who shall take on himself to say the shape in which we now should be privileged to regard the greatest artist that ever expressed himself in speech? It is in all departments of human energy as in the eternal round of nature. There can be no birth where there is no preparation. The sower must take his seedsheet, and go afield into ground prepared for his ministrations; or there can be no harvest. The Poet springs from a compost of ideals and experiences and achievements, whose essences he absorbs and assimilates, and in whose absence he could not be the Poet. This is especially true of Burns. He was the last of a school. It culminated in him, because he had more genius, and genius of a finer, a rarer, and a more generous quality, than all his immediate ancestors put together. But he cannot fairly be said to have contributed anything to it except himself. He invented none of its forms; its spirit was none of his originating; its ideals and standards of perfection were discovered, and partly realised, by other men; and he had a certain timidity, as it were a fainéantise, in conception—a kind of unreadiness in initiative—which makes him more largely dependent upon his exemplars than any great poet has ever been. Not only does he take whatever the Vernacular School can give in such matters as tone, sentiment, method, diction, phrase; but also, he is content to run in debt to it for suggestions as regards ideas and for models in style. Hamilton of Gilbertfield and Allan Ramsay conventionalise the Rhymed Epistle; and he accepts the convention as it left their hands, and produces epistles in rhyme which are glorified Hamilton-Ramsay. Fergusson writes Caller Water, and Leith Races, and The Farmer's Ingle, and Planestanes and Causey, and the Ode to the Gowdspink; and he follows suit with Scotch Drink, and the Saturday Night, and The Holy Fair, and The Brigs of Ayr, and the Mouse and the Mountain Daisy. Sempill of Beltrees starts a tradition with The Piper of Kilbarchan; and his effect is plain in the elegies on Tam Samson and Poor Mailie. Ramsay sees a Vision, and tinkers old, indecent songs, and writes comic tales in glib octo-syllabics; and instinctively and naturally Burns does all three. It is as though some touch of rivalry were needed to put him on his mettle: \(^1\) as though, instead of writing and caring for himself alone—(as Keats and Byron did, and Shelley: new men all, and founders of dynasties, not final expressions of sovranity)—to be himself he must still be emulous of some one

\(^1\) It was with 'emulating vigour' that he strung his 'wildly-sounding rustic lyre'; and he read Ramsay and Fergusson not 'for servile imitation' but 'to kindle at their flame.' Another instance, or rather another suggestion, from himself, and I have done. It 'exalted,' it 'enraptured' him 'to walk in the sheltered side of a wood, or high plantation, in a cloudy winter day,' and hear the wind roaring in the trees. Then was his 'best season for devotion,' for then was his mind 'rapt up in a kind of enthusiasm to Him who ... "walks on the wings of the wind."' The 'rapture' and the 'exaltation' are but dimly and vaguely reflected in his Winter. But if some ancestor had tried to express a kindred feeling, then had Winter been a masterpiece.
else. This is not written as a reproach: it is stated as a fact. On the strength of that fact one cannot choose but abate the old, fantastic estimate of Burns's originality. But originality (to which, by the way, he laid no claim) is but one element in the intricately formed and subtly ordered plexus, which is called genius; and I do not know that we need think any the less of Burns for that it is not predominant in him. Original or not, he had the Vernacular and its methods at his fingers' ends. He wrote the heroic couplet (on the Dryden-Pope convention) clumsily, and without the faintest idea of what it had been in Marlowe's hands, without the dimmest foreshadowing of what it was presently to be in Keats's; he had no skill in what is called 'blank verse'—by which I mean the metre in which Shakespeare triumphed, and Milton after Shakespeare, and Thomson and Cowper, each according to his lights, after Shakespeare and Milton; he was a kind of hob-nailed Gray in his use of choric strophes and in his apprehension of the ode. But he entered into the possession of such artful and difficult stanzas as that of Montgomerie's \textit{Banks of Helicon} and his own favourite sextain as an heir upon the ownership of an estate which he has known in all its details since he could know anything. It was fortunate for him and for his book, as it was fortunate for the world at large—as, too, it was afterwards to be fortunate for Scots song—that he was thus imitative in kind and thus traditional in practice. He had the sole ear of the Vernacular Muse; there was not a tool in her budget of which he was not master; and he took his place, the moment he moved for it, not so much, perhaps, by reason of his uncommon capacity as, because he discovered himself to his public in the very terms—of diction, form, style, sentiment even—with which that public was familiar from of old, and in which it was waiting and longing to be addressed.

It was at Mossgiel that the enormous possibilities in Burns were revealed to Burns himself; and it was at Mossgiel that he did nearly all his best and strongest work. The revelation once made, he stayed not in his course, but wrote masterpiece after masterpiece, with a rapidity, an assurance, a command of means, a brilliancy of effect, which make his achievement one of the most remarkable in English letters. To them that can rejoice in the Vernacular his very titles are enough to recall a little special world of variety and character and delight: the world, in fact, where you can take your choice among lyrical gems like Corn Rigs and Green Grow the Rashes and Mary Morison and masterpieces of satire like Holy Willie and the Address to the Unco Guid. To this time belong The Jolly Beggars and Halloween and The Holy Fair; to this time the Louse and the Mouse, the Auld Mare and the Twa Dogs; to this time,

1 In the same way Byron sold four or five editions of the English Bards, because it was written on a convention which was as old as Bishop Hall, and had been used by every satirist from the time of that master down to Matthias and Gifford. If he had cast his libellus into the octaves of Don Juan, the strong presumption is that it would have fallen still-born from the press. Other cases in point are Blake, Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, and Browning: the manner of each was new, and not all have reached the general yet.

VOL. IV.
Scotch Drink and the Address to the Deil, the Earnest Cry and the Mountain Daisy, the Epistles to Smith and Rankine and Sillar and Lapraik, the Elegies on Tam Samson and the never-to-be-forgotten Mailie, the Reply to a Tailor and the Welcome and the Saturday Night. In some, as The Ordination, The Holy Tulyie, and, despite an unrivalled and inimitable picture of drunkenness, Hornbook itself, with others in a greater or less degree, the interest, once you have appreciated the technical quality as it deserves, is very largely local and particular. In others, as the Saturday Night and The Vision (after the first stanzas of description), it is also very largely sentimental; and in both these it is further vitiated by the writer's 'falling to his English,' to a purpose not exhilarating to the knower of Shakespeare and Milton and Herrick. But all this notwithstanding, and notwithstanding quite a little crowd of careless rhymes, the level of excellence is one that none but the born great writer can maintain. Bold, graphic, variable, expressive, packed with observations and ideas, the phrases go ringing and glittering on through verse after verse, through stave after stave, through poem after poem, in a way that makes the reading of this peasant a

1 There is a sense in which the most are local—are parochial even. In Holy Willie itself the type is not merely the Scots Calvinistic pharisee: it is a particular expression of that type; the thing is a local satire introducing the 'kail and potatoes' of a local scandal. Take, too, The Holy Fair: the circumstances, the manners, the characters, the experience—all are local. Apply the test to almost any—not forgetting the Tam o' Shanter which is the top of Burns's achievement—and the result is the same.
peculiar pleasure for the student of style. And if, with an eye for words and effects in words, that student have also the faculty of laughter, then are his admiration and his pleasure multiplied ten-fold. For the master-quality of Burns, the quality which has gone, and will ever go, the furthest to make him universally and perennially acceptable—acceptable in Melbourne (say) a hundred years hence as in Mauchline a hundred years syne—is humour. His sentiment is sometimes strained, obvious, and deliberate—as might be expected of the poet who foundered two pocket-copies of that very silly and disgusting book, The Man of Feeling; and it

1 It is not, remember, for 'the love of lovely words,' not for such perfections of human utterance as abound in Shakespeare:—

'Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy':—

in Milton:—

'Now to the moon in wavering morrice move':—

in Keats:—

'And hides the green hill in an April shroud':—

in Herrick:—

'Ye have been fresh and green,
    Ye have been filled with flowers,
    And ye the walks have been Where maids have spent their hours':—

that we revert to Burns. Felicities he has—felicities innumerable; but his forebears set themselves to be humorous, racy, natural, and he could not choose but follow their lead. The Colloquial triumphs in his verse as nowhere outside the Vision and Don Juan; but for Beauty we must go elsewhither. He has all manner of qualities: wit, fancy, vision of a kind, nature, gaiety, the richest humour, a sort of homespun verbal magic. But, if we be in quest of Beauty, we must e'en ignore him, and 'fall to our English': of whose secrets, as I've said, he never so much as suspected the existence, and whose supreme capacities were sealed from him until the end.
often rings a little false, as in much of the Saturday Night. But his humour — broad, rich, prevailing, now lascivious or gargantuan and now fanciful or jocose, now satirical and brutal and now instinct with sympathy, is ever irresistible. Holy Willie is much more vigorously alive in London, and Melbourne, and Cape Town to-day than poor drunken old Will Fisher was in the Mauchline of 1785. That 'pagan full of pride,' the vigilant, tricksy, truculent, familiar, true-blue Devil lives ever in Burns's part pitying and fanciful, part humorous and controversial presentment; but he has long since faded out of his strongholds in the Kirk:

'But fare-you-weel, Auld Nickie-Ben!
O, wad ye tak' a thought an' men'!
Ye aiblins might—I dinna ken—
Still hae a stake:
I'm wae to think upo' you den,
Ev'n for your sake!'

Lockhart, ever the true Son of the Manse, was so misguided — so mansified, to coin a word — as to wish that Burns had written a Holy Fair in the spirit and to the purpose of The Cotter's Saturday Night. But the bright, distinguishing qualities of The Holy Fair are humour and experience and sincerity; the intent of the Saturday Night is idyllic and sentimental, as its effect is laboured and unreal; and I, for my part, would not give my Holy Fair, still less my Halloween or my Jolly Beggars — observed, selected, excellently reported — for a wilderness of Saturday Nights. It is not hard to understand that (given the prestance of its author) the Saturday Night was doomed to popularity from the first; being of its essence sentimental and therefore pleasingly untrue, and being, also of its essence, patriotic—an assertion of the honour and the glory and the piety of Scotland. But that any one with an eye for fact and an ear for verse should prefer its tenuity of inspiration and its poverty of rhythm and diction before the sincere and abounding humour and the notable mastery of means, before the plenitude of life and the complete accord of design and effect, by which Halloween and The Holy Fair, and nine-tenths of the early pieces in the Vernacular are distinguished, appears inexplicable. In these Burns is an artist and a poet: in the Saturday Night he is neither one nor other. In these, and in Tam o' Shanter, the Scots School culminates: as English Drama, with lyrical and elegiac English, culminates in Othello and the Sonnets, in Antony and Cleopatra and the Adonis and The Rape of Lucrece: more gloriously far than the world would ever have wagered on its beginnings. It is the most individual asset in the heritage bequeathed by 'the Bard'; and still more, perhaps, than the Songs,

1 And such popularity! 'Poosie Nancy's'—(thus writes a friend, even as these sheets are passing through the press)—'or rather a house on the site of Poosie Nancy's, is, as you know, still a tavern. There is a large room (for parties) at the back. And what, think you, is the poem that, printed and framed and glazed, is hung in the place of honour on its walls? "The Jolly Beggars—naturally?" Not a bit of it. The Cotter's Saturday Night! Surrounded, too, by engravings depicting its choicest moments and its most affecting scenes.'

2 I say, 'perhaps,' because Burns, among the general at least, is better sung than read. But if the Songs, his own and those which are effects of a collaboration, be the more national, the it stamps and keeps him the National Poet. The world it pictures—the world of ‘Scotch morals, Scotch Religion, and Scotch drink’—may be ugly or not (as refracted through his temperament, it is not). Ugly or not, however, it was the world of Burns; to paint it was part of his mission; it lives for us in his pictures; and many such attempts at reconstruction as The Earthly Paradise and The Idylls of the King will ‘fade far away, dissolve,’ and be quite forgotten, ere these pictures disfeature or dislimn. He had the good sense to concern himself with the life he knew. The way of realism lay Poems are the greater, and it is chiefly to the Poems that Burns is indebted for his place in literature.

1 It is claimed for him, with perfect truth, that he went straight to Nature. But the Vernacular makers seldom did anything else. An intense and abiding consciousness of the common circumstances of life was ever the distinguishing note of Scots Poetry. It thrills through Henryson, through Dunbar and the Douglas of certain 'Prolougs' to Eneados, through Lindsay and Scott, through the nameless lyric of Peebles at the Play and Christ's Kirk on the Green, through much of The Bannatyne M.S., the Sempill of the Tuschene Bischope, the Montgomerie of the Flying with Polwarth and of certain sonnets:

'Raw reid herring reistit in the reik.'

It is even audible in the Cuid and Godlie Ballats; and after the silence it is heard anew in the verse which was made despite the Kirk, and in the verse which proceeded from that verse—the verse, that is, of Ramsay and Fergusson and Burns. This vivid and curious interest in facts is, as I think, a characteristic of the 'perfervid ingyne.' Compare, for instance, Pitscottie and Knox on the murder of Cardinal Beaton. The one is something naïve, the other as it were Shakespearean; but in both the element of particularity is vital to the complete effect. These are two instances only; but I could easily give two hundred. (See post p. 323, Note 1.) To return to Burns and his treatment of weather' (say) and landscape. His verse is full of realities:
broadly beaten by his ancestors, and was natural to his feet; he followed it with vision, with humour, with 'inspiration and sympathy,' and with art; and in the sequel he is found to be one in the first flight of English poets after Milton, Chaucer, Shakespeare.

I take it that Burns was not more multifarious in his loves than most others in whom the primordial instinct is of peculiar strength. But it was written that English literature—the literature of Chaucer, Shakespeare, Fielding—should be turned into a kind of schoolgirls' playground; so that careful Editors have done their best to make him even as themselves, and to fit him with a suit of practical and literary morals, which, if his own verse and prose mean anything, he would have refused, with all the contumely of which his 'Carrick lips' were

'When lyart leaves bestrow the yird,
Or, wavering like the bauckie-bird,
Bedim cauld Boreas' blast;
When hailstanes drive wi' bitter skyte...'

The burn stealing under the long yellow broom:

'When, tumbling brown, the burn comes down...
'The speedy gleams the darkness swallowed...
'Yon murky cloud is foul with rain...
'November chill blaws loud wi' angry sigh':—

all exactly noted and vividly recorded (a most instructive instance is the 'burnie' stanza in "Halloween"; for he had, they say, a peculiar delight in running water). But for great, imaginative impressions:

'Those green-robed senators of mighty woods,
Tall oaks branch-charmèd by the earnest stars':—

capable, to wear. Nothing has exercised their ingenuity, their talent for chronology, their capacity for invention (even), so vigorously as the task of squaring their theory of Burns with the story of his marriage and the legend of his Highland Lassie. And now is the moment to deal with both.

Elizabeth Paton's child was born in the November of 1784. In the April of that year, a few weeks after the general settlement at Mossgiel, he made the acquaintance of Armour the mason's daughter, Jean. She was a handsome, lively girl; the acquaintance ripened into love on both sides; and in the end, after what dates approve a prolonged and serious courtship, Armour fell with child. Her condition being discovered, Burns, after some strong revulsions of feeling against—not Jean, I hope, but—the estate of marriage, gave her what he presently had every reason to call 'an unlucky paper,' recognising her as his wife; and, had things been allowed to drift in the usual way, the world had lacked an unforgettable scandal and a great deal of silly writing. This, though, was not to be. Old Armour—('a bit mason body, who used to snuff a guid deal, and gey af'en tak' a bit dram')—is said to have 'hated' Burns: so that he would 'reyther hae seen the Deil himsel' comin' to the hoose to coort his dochter than him.' Thus a contemporary of both Armour and Burns; and in any case Armour knew Burns for a needy and reckless man, the father of one by-blow, a rebel at odds with the Orthodox, of whom, in existing circumstances, it would be vain to ask a comfortable living. So he first obliged Jean to give up the ‘unlucky paper,’ with a view to unmaking any engagement it might confirm,1 and then sent her to Paisley, to be out of her lover’s way. In the meanwhile Burns himself was in straits, and had half-a-dozen designs in hand at once. Mossgiel was a failure; he had resolved to deport himself to the West Indies; he had made up his mind to print, and the Kilmarnock Edition was setting, when Jean was sent into exile. Worst of all, he seems to have been not very sure whether he loved or not. When he knew that he and she had not eluded the Inevitable, he wrote to James Smith that ‘against two things—staying at home and owning her conjugally’—he was ‘fixed as fate.’ ‘The first,’ he says, ‘by heaven I will not do!’ Then, in a burst of Don-Juanism—Don-Juanism of the kind that protests too much to be real—‘the last, by hell I will never do.’ Follows a gush of sentimentalism (to Smith), which is part nerves and part an attempt—as the run on the g’s and the w’s shows—at literature:—‘A good God bless you, and make you happy up to the warmest weeping wish of parting friendship.’ And this is succeeded by a message to the poor, pregnant creature, of whom, but two lines before, he has sworn ‘by hell’ that he will never make her honest:—‘If you see Jean, tell her

1 I take it that the paper was ‘unlucky,’ because it became a weapon in old Armour’s hands, and was the means of inflicting on the writer the worst and the most painful experience of his life. At the same time there seems to be no doubt that it made Jean Mrs. Burns, so that, consciously or not, Anld (who probably had a strong objection to the marriage) was guilty of an illegal act in certifying Burns a bachelor. Burns, in fact, was completely justified in his anger with the Kirk and in the scorn with which he visited the tyranny of her ministers.
I will meet her, so help me God in my hour of need.' This scrap is undated, but it must have been written before 17th February 1786, when he wrote thus to Richmond:—‘I am extremely happy with Smith; he is the only friend I have now in Mauchline.’ Well, he does meet Jean; and, his better nature getting the upper hand, the ‘unlucky paper’ is written. Then on the 20th March he writes thus to Muir:—‘I intend to have a gill between us or a mutchkin stoup,’ for the reason that it ‘will be a great comfort and consolation’;—which seems to show that Jean has repudiated him some time between the two letters. Before the 2nd April, on which day the Kirk-Session takes cognisance of the matter, Jean has gone to Paisley; the ‘unlucky paper’ is cancelled (apparently about the 14th April, the names were cut out with a penknife); so that Don Juan finds himself planté-là, and being not really Don Juan—(as what sentimentalist could be?)—he does not affect Don Juan any more. The prey has turned upon the hunter; the deserter becomes the deserted, the privilege of repudiation, ‘by hell’ or otherwise, has passed to the other side. The man’s pride, inordinate for a peasant, is cut to the quick; and his unrivalled capacity for ‘battering himself into an affection’ or a mood has a really notable opportunity for display. In love before, he is ten times more in love than ever; he feels his loss to desperation; he becomes the disappointed lover—even the true-souled, generous, adoring victim of a jilt:—

‘A jilet brak his heart at last
That’s owre the sea.’
In effect, his position was sufficiently distracting. He had made oath that he would not marry Jean; then he had practically married her; then he found that nobody wanted her married to him—that, on the contrary, he was the most absolute ‘detrimental’ in all Ayrshire; when, of course, the marriage became the one thing that made his life worth living. He tried to persuade old Armour to think better of his resolve; and, failing, ran ‘nine parts and nine tenths out of ten stark staring mad.’ Also he wrote the Lament, in which he told his sorrows to the moon¹ (duly addressing that satellite as ‘O thou pale Orb’), and took her publicly into his confidence, in the beautiful language of Eighteenth Century English Poetry, and painted what is in the circumstances a really creditable picture of the effects upon a simple Bard of ‘a faithless woman’s broken vow.’ Further, he produced Despondency in the same elegant lingo; and, in Despondency, having called for ‘the closing tomb,’ and pleasingly praised ‘the Solitary’s lot,’—

‘Who, all-forgetting, all-forgot,
Within his humble cell—
The cavern, wild with tangling roots—
Sits o’er his newly gather’d fruits,
Beside his crystal well!’ etc.—

he addressed himself to Youth and Infancy in these affecting terms:—

¹ Is it worth noting that, later, when he comes to sing of Mary Campbell, his confidant is no longer the Moon but the Morning Star?
‘O enviable early days,
When dancing Thoughtless pleasure’s maze,
To care, to guilt unknown!
How ill exchang’d for riper times,
To feel the follies or the crimes
Of others, or my own!
Ye tiny elves that guiltless sport,
Like linnets in the bush,
Ye little know the ills ye court,
When manhood is your wish!
The losses, the crosses
That active man engage;
The fears all, the tears all
Of dim declining Age!’

Moreover, he took occasion to refer to Jean (to David Brice; 12th June 1786) as ‘poor, ill-advised, ungrateful Armour’; vowed that he could ‘have no nearer idea of the place of eternal punishment’ than ‘what I have felt in my own breast on her

---

1 I cannot attach any great importance to these exercises in Poetic English. Burns wrote to a very different purpose when he wrote from his heart and in his native tongue:—

‘Had we never loved sae kindly . . . ’
‘Of a’ the airts the wind can blaw

and so on, and so on. Still, there can be no doubt that they mean something. At any rate they are designed to be impressive and ‘fine’: and probably the Bard believed in them to the extent to which he was satisfied with his achievement in what must certainly have seemed to him real poetry. None of your Vernacular (that is), but downright, solid, unmistakable English Verse: verse which might stand beside the works of Beattie and Shenstone and Thomson and the ‘elegantly melting Gray.’ That life departed them long since is plain. But it is just as plain that they meant something to Burns, for (apparently) he took much pains with them, saw not their humorous aspect, and included them in his first (Kilmarnock) Volume.
account’; and finally confessed himself to this purpose:—‘I have tried often to forget her: I have run into all kinds of dissipation and riot . . . to drive her out of my head, but all in vain.’ Long before this, however—as early, it would seem, as some time in March—his ‘maddening passions, roused to tenfold fury,’ having done all sorts of dreadful things, and then ‘sunk into a lurid calm,’ he had ‘subsided into the time-settled sorrow of the sable widower,’ and had lifted his ‘grief-worn eye to look for—another wife.’ In other words, he had pined for female society, and had embarked upon those famous love-passages with Highland Mary.

Little that is positive is known of Mary Campbell except that she once possessed a copy of the Scriptures (now very piously preserved at Ayr), and that she is the subject of a fantasy, in bronze, at Dunoon. But to consider her story is, almost inevitably, to be forced back upon one of two conclusions:—either (1) she was something of a lightskirts; or (2) she is a kind of Scottish Mrs. Harris. The theory in general acceptance—what is called the Episode Theory—is that she was ‘an innocent and gentle Highland nursery-maid’ (thus, after Chambers, R. L. S.) ‘in the service of a neighbouring family’ (Gavin Hamilton’s); that she consoled Burns—mais pour le bon motif—for Jean’s desertion; that they agreed to marry; that, on her departure for the West to prepare for the event, ‘Ayr, gurgling, kissed his pebbled shore,’ and they exchanged vows and Bibles; and that she died, of a malignant fever, some few months after her return to Greenock. Another identifies her (on Richmond’s authority) with a serving-maid in Mauchline, who was the mistress of a Montgomerie, and had withal such a hold upon Burns that for a brief while he was crazy to make her his wife; and some have thought that this may be the Mary Campbell who, according to the Dundonald Session Records, fathered a child on one John Hay. This last hypothesis is, of course, most hateful to the puzzle-headed puritans who cannot, or will not, believe, despite the fact that the world has always teemed with Antonies, each of them mad for his peculiar Cleopatra, that Burns, particularly in his present straits, might very well have been enamoured of a gay girl to the point of marriage. So, for the consolation of these, there has been devised a third, according to which her name was either Mary Campbell or something unknown; but, whatever she was called, she was so far and away the purest and sweetest of her sex—the one 'white rose,' in fact, which grew up among 'the passion flowers' of the Bard's career—that she must, had she married him, have entirely 'rectified' his character, and have transformed him into a pattern Kirk-of-Scotland puritan of the puritans. On the other hand, it has become obvious to some whole-hearted devotees of the Marian Ideal that a 'young person' of this sort could scarce have been of so coming a habit as to skip with alacrity into Jean's old shoes, and—shutting her innocent eyes to the fact that Burns, a man notoriously at war with the Kirk and the seducer of two unmarried women, was at the same time at his wits' end for cash—consent to cast in her lot with his at a moment's notice and with never a sign from the family she was to enter. If she could do that, plainly she could not, except on strong positive testimony, be made to do duty as a white rose among passion-flowers; or if, on some unknown and inenarrable hypothesis, she could, then, says one of the devout, 'the conduct of Burns was that of a scoundrel.' This is absurd! So of late (1896–97) there has come into being a wish to believe that either Mary Campbell preceded Armour in the Bard's affections, or the Highland Lassie never existed at all, but was a creature of Burns's brain: an ideal of womanhood to which his thought ascended from the mire of this world—(the world of Ellisland, and Jean, and the children, and the songs in Johnson's Museum)—as Dante's to his Beatrice of dream. Given Burns's own habit and the habit of the Scots peasant woman, there is still no earthly reason for rejecting the Episode Theory—even were rejection possible—however seriously it reflects upon the morals of the parties concerned. But it is fair to add that the subject is both complicated and obscure. Burns's own references to his Highland Lassie are deliberately insignificant and vague: for once in his life he was reticent. His statement that she went home to prepare for their marriage is heavily discounted by the fact that he did not introduce her to his family as his betrothed, in nowise prepared for marriage on his own account, never dreamed, except in sporadic copies of verse, of taking her to the West Indies, and was all the while so desperately enamoured of Jean that not by any amount of self-indulgence could he rid his breast of her: by the fact, too, that, if his thought went back to the Highland Lassie in after years, his report of the journey is strongly tinctured with remorse.\(^1\) Currie’s statement is that ‘the banks of Ayr formed the scene of youthful passions . . . the history of which it would be improper to reveal,’ etc. Gilbert Burns, after noting that Nanie Fleming’s charms were ‘sexual’—‘which indeed was the characteristic of the greater part of his . (Robert's) mistresses’—is careful, perhaps with an eye on the heroine of Thou Ling’ring Star, to record the statement that Robert, at least, ‘was no platonic lover, whatever he might pretend or suppose of himself to the contrary.’ There is Richmond’s statement, as reported by Train. There is the Mary Campbell of the Dundonald Register. There is the certainty that relations there were between Burns and a Mary Campbell. There is the strong probability that Mary Campbell and the Highland Lassie were one and the same person. There is Burns's own witness to the circumstance that they met and parted under extremely suspicious conditions. That, really, is all. Yet, on the strength of a romantic impulse on the part of Robert Chambers, the heroine-in-chief of Burns’s story is not the loyal and patient soul whom he appreciated as the fittest to be his wife he’d ever met: not the Jean who endured his affronts, and mothered his children (her own and another’s), and took the rough and the smooth,

\(^1\) He sent Thou Ling’ring Star to Mrs. Dunlop in a letter dated 8th November 1789. In acknowledging it, the lady noted its remorseful cast, and hoped it didn’t set forth a personal experience. There is nothing to show that he gave her any particulars, or essayed to disabuse her of the idea that remorse there well might be.
the best and the worst of life with him, and wore his name for well-nigh forty years after his death as her sole title to regard. On the contrary, that heroine-in-chief is a girl of whom scarce anything definite is known, while what may be reasonably suspected of her, though natural and feminine enough, is so displeasing to some fanatics, that, for Burns's sake (not hers) they would like to mythologise her out of being; or, at the least, to make her as arrant an impossibility as the tame, proper, figmentary Burns, the coinage of their own tame, proper brains, which they have done their best to substitute for the lewd, amazing peasant of genius, the inspired faun, whose voice has gone ringing through the courts of Time these hundred years and more, and is far louder and far clearer now than when it first broke on the ear of man.

Stevenson was an acute and delicate critic at many points; but he wrote like a novelist—like Thackeray, say, of Fielding and Sterne—when he wrote of Armour as a 'facile and empty-headed girl,' and insisted, still possessed by Chambers's vain imaginings, that she was first and last in love with another man. In truth the facility was on the other side. In 1784 Burns is willing to marry Betty Paton, and writes thus to Thomas Orr:—'I am very glad Peggy [Thomson] is off my hand, as I am at present embarrassed enough without her.' In 1785 he is courting Jean Armour, and very early in 1786 Jean is in the family way, and 'by hell' she shall never be his wife. But some time in March

Jean is sent to Paisley; and the 'maddening passions,' etc., set to work; and he can no more 'se consoler de son départ' than Calypso could for that of Ulysses. So in a hand's turn he becomes the stricken deer, and, as we have seen, protests (to the Moon) that to marry Jean, and wear 'The promis'd father's tender name' are his sole ambitions. As Jean does not return, however, he seeks (and finds) such comfort as he may in exchanging vows and Bibles and what Chamfort called 'fantaisies' with Mary Campbell. On the 12th-13th May he writes _The Court of Equity—a_ task the strangest conceivable for a lover, whether rejoicing or distraught. On the 14th 'Ayr, gurgling, kisses his pebbled shore,' and 'The flowers spring wanton to be prest,' and Highland Mary leaves for the West to make these famous preparations. On the 15th May he dates (at least) the _Epistle to a Young Friend:_

> 'The sacred lowe o' weel-plac'd love,
> Luxuriantly indulge it,' etc.:—

and, as for some time past, he is still the gallant, howbeit in jest, of Betty Miller: till on the 9th June 'poor ill-advised Armour' returns to Mauchline; and on the 12th he writes that 'for all her part in a certain black affair' he 'still loves her to distraction,' and, with a view to forgetting her has 'run into all kinds of dissipation and riot . . . but in vain.' On the 28th June he appears before 'the Poacher Court,' acknowledges paternity, and is 'promised a certificate as a single man': on condition that he do penance before the congregation on three successive Sundays. On the 9th July, the occasion of his first appearance, he has 'a foolish hankering fondness' for Jean, but, calling on her and being put to the door, he remarks that she does not 'show that penitence that might have been expected'; so, on the 22nd, he executes a deed by which he makes over all his property to the 'wee image of his bonie Betty,' to the exclusion of whatever might come of his affair with the recusant. Then, on the 30th (Old Armour having, meanwhile, got a warrant against him, and sent him into hiding'), he adjures Richmond—(who, he knows, will 'pour an execration' on Jean's head)—to 'spare the poor, ill-advised girl for my sake'; and on the 14th August he calls on Heaven to 'bless the Sex,' for that 'I feel there is still happiness for me among them.' Against this panorama of tumult and variety and adventure, enlarged in Edinburgh, and enriched at Ellisland and in Dumfries, there are to set the years of simple abnegation, magnanimity, and devotion with which the 'facile and empty-headed girl' repaid the husband of her choice. The conclusion is obvious. The Novelist turned Critic is still the Novelist. Consciously or not, he develops preferences, for, consciously or not, he must still create. Stevenson's preferences were 1 No doubt he retired on information sent by Jean.

2 Thus Stevenson, who himself liked 'dressing a part' (so to speak), was persuaded that Burns did likewise, and accepted oodily that absurd, fantastic story (told by two Englishmen), in which the Bard, in a fox-skin cap and an enormous coat, and girt with a Highland broadsword, is seen angling from a Nithside rock. Jean denied it, and said that Robert (who hated field-sports, as we know) never angled in his life. But the Novelist was roused; and all that was ignored.
with Rab Mossgiel. And the result was a grave—but not, I hope, a lasting—injustice to an excellent and very womanly woman and a model wife.¹

As to Highland Mary, one of two conclusions: (1) Either she was a paragon; or (2) she was not. In the first case, her story has yet to be written, and written on evidence that is positive and irrefutable. In the second, the bronze at Dunoon bears abiding witness to the existence (at a certain time) of what can only be described as a national delusion.

By this time the end of Mauchline, and of much besides, was nearer than Burns knew. Probably sent to press in the May of 1786, the Kilmarnock Volume was published at the end of July.² Most of, if not

¹ On the 3rd September Jean lay in of twins. They were presently taken by their respective grandmothers, to whom, I doubt not, they gave great joy: as in that and other stages of society the appearance of the third generation, whether its right to exist be legal or not, does always. Burns announced the event as only Burns could, by sending Nature’s Law:

‘Kind Nature’s care had given him share

to Gavin Hamilton; a ‘God bless the little dears,’ with a snatch of indecent song, to Richmond; and a really heartfelt and affecting bit of prose on the subject of paternity to Robert Muir.

² One effect of its publication was to secure him the friendship of Mrs. Dunlop (ii. 352–3). It is evident from this lady’s letters that her interest in him could scarce have been warmer had he been her son. She prized his correspondence as beyond rubies, and as a rule he was slower to reply than she (once, being hurt by his silence, she told him she wouldn’t write again till he asked all, the numbers contained in it were probably familiar to the countryside. Some had certainly been received with 'a roar of applause'; Burns, who was not the man to hide his light under a bushel (his temperament was too radiant and too vigorous for that), was given to multiplying his verses in ms. copies for friends; he had been 'read into fame' by Aiken the lawyer: so that Poems, Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect was, in a sense, as 'well advertised' as book could be. Its triumph was not less instant than well-deserved:¹ the first issue, six hundred copies strong, was exhausted in a month ('tis said that not one could be spared for Mossgiel). But Burns himself, according to himself, and he was ever punctiliously exact and scrupulous on the score of money, was but £20 in her, and, failing to draw him, within a week she is found begging his pardon for her petulance. She made him many gifts—apparently in money and in kind—gifts at New Year and other times, and accepted gifts from him (once he sent her a keg of old brandy). Her influence made ever for decency, and it may well have been on her remonstrances, which were strong, that he finally resolved to remove some of the coarser phrases in his earlier editions. Her last (extant) letter is dated 11th January 1795. For some unexplained reasons she ceased from writing several months before the January of 1796. It may have been that she heard of him as often in drink, or that she was told of the affair at Woodley Park. In any case she esteemed him so highly, and admired him so lavishly, that 'tis quite impossible to believe the breach in the correspondence due to any fault of hers.

pocket by it; the Kilmarnock printer declined to strike off a second impression, with additions, unless he got the price of the paper (£27) in advance; and for some time it seemed that there was nothing but Jamaica for the writer, Local Bard and Local Hero though he were: so that he looked to have sailed in mid-August, and again on the 1st September, and at some indeterminate date had 'conveyed his chest thus far on the road to Greenock,' and written that solemn and moving song—far and away the best, I think, and the sincerest thing he left in English—The Gloomy Night is Gathering Fast. It was to be the 'last effort' of his 'Muse in Caledonia.' But, for one or another reason, his departure was ever deferred; and, though on the 30th October (some ten days, it is surmised, after the death of Mary Campbell), he was still writing that, 'ance to the Indies he was wonted,' he'd certainly contrive to 'mak' the best o' life Wi' some sweet elf,' on the 18th November, 'I am thinking for my Edinburgh expedition on Monday or Tuesday come s'enight.' In effect, an 'Edinburgh expedition' was natural and inevitable. Ballantine of Ayr is said to have suggested the idea of such an adventure; Gilbert and the family are said to have applauded it. But as early as the 4th September the excellent Blacklock—(in 'a letter to a friend of mine which overthrew all my schemes')—had called—'for the sake of the young man'—for a second edition, 'more numerous than the former': inasmuch as 'it appears certain that its intrinsic merit, and the exertions of the author's friends, might give it a more universal circulation than anything of the kind which has been published within my memory.' Thus Blacklock; and the 'friend of mine,' who was Lawrie, the minister of Loudoun, had communicated Blacklock's letter to the person most concerned in Blacklock's suggestion. Bold, proud, intelligent au possible, strongly possessed too (so he says, and so I believe) by the genius of paternity, Burns the Man, who had a very becoming opinion of Burns the Bard, and could fairly appreciate that worthy's merits, must certainly have seen that in Edinburgh he had many chances of succeeding at the very point where the Kilmarnock printer failed him. I do not doubt, either, that he was tired of being the Local Poet, the Local Satirist, the Local Wit, the Local Lothario (even), and eager to essay himself on another and a vaster stage than Mauchline; for, if he had n't been thus tired and thus eager, he would n't have been Robert Burns. The fighting spirit, the genius of emulation, is so strong in us all that a man of temperament and brains must assert himself, and get accepted at his own (or another) valuation, exactly as a cock must crow. And I love to believe that Burns, being immitigably of this metal, entered upon his adventure—(27th November: on a borrowed nag, with not much money, a letter of introduction to Dalrymple of Oran^efield, and a visiting list consisting entirely in Dugald Stewart and Richmond, the lawyer's clerk)—with the joyous heart and the stiff neck of one who knows himself a man among men, and whose chief ambition is to 'drink delight of battle with his peers'—if he can find them.

He reached the capital on the 28th November, and was hospitably entertained by Richmond—to the extent, indeed, of a bedfellow's share in the clerk's one little room in Baxter's Place, Lawn-market. Through Dalrymple of Orangefield he got access to Lord Glencairn and others: among them Harry Erskine, Dean of Faculty, and that curious, irascible, pompous ass, the Earl of Buchan, and Creech the publisher, who had been Glencairn's tutor, and who advertised the Edinburgh Edition on the 14th December. He was everywhere received as he merited, and he made such admirable use of his vogue that, five days before Creech's advertisement was printed, he could tell his friend and patron, Gavin Hamilton, that he was rapidly qualifying for the position of Tenth Worthy and Eighth Wise Man of the World. He saw everybody worth seeing, and talked with everybody worth talking to; he was made welcome by 'heavenly Burnett' and her frolic Grace of Gordon, and welcome by the ribald, scholarly, hard-drinking wits and jinkers of the Crochallan Fencibles, for whose use and edification he made the unique and precious collection now called The Merry Muses of Caledonia; he moved and bore himself as easily at Dugald Stewart's as in Baxter's Place, in Creech's shop, with Henry Mackenzie and Gregory and Blair, as at that extraordinary meeting of the St Andrew's Lodge, where, at the Grand Master's bidding, the Brethren assembled drank the health of 'Caledonia and Caledonia's Bard—Brother Burns': a toast received with 'multiplied honours and repeated acclamations.' To look at, 'he was like a farmer dressed to dine with the laird'; his manners were 'rustic, not clownish'; he had 'a sort of dignified plainness and simplicity.' Then, 'his address to females was always extremely deferential, and always'—this on the authority of the Duchess of Gordon—'with a turn to the pathetic or humorous, which engaged their attention particularly.' For the rest, 'I never saw a man in company with his superiors in station and information more perfectly free from either the reality or the affectation of embarrassment.' Thus, long afterwards, Sir Walter, who noted also, boy as he was, 'the strong expression of sense and shrewdness in all his lineaments,' and who, long afterwards, had never seen such an eye as Burns's 'in a human head, though I have seen the most distinguished men'—(Byron among them; and Byron's eye was one of Byron's points)—'of my time.' It is not wonderful, perhaps, that Burns, with his abounding temperament, his puissant charm, his potency in talk, his rare gifts of eye and voice,¹ should have strongly affected Edinburgh Society, brilliant in its elements and distinguished in its effect as it was. There has been no Burns since Burns; or history certainly have repeated itself. What is really wonderful is the way in which Burns kept his head in Edinburgh Society, and stood prepared for the inevitable reaction. Through all the 'thick, strong, stupefying incense smoke' (and there was certainly a very great deal of it), he held a steady eye upon his future. He saw most clearly that the life of a nine-days' wonder is at most nine days, and that now was his time or never. But if he expected preferment, he was neither extravagantly elated in anticipation, nor unduly depressed by disappointment; and, for all his self-consciousness—('And God had given his share')—he was not too platonic to solicit the favours of at least one servant-girl (he was arrested, August 1787, on a warrant In meditatio fugae), nor too punctilious to make love to 'a Lothian farmer's daughter, a very pretty girl, whom I've almost persuaded to accompany me to the West Country, should I ever return,' etc., nor too philosophical not to regret his Jean, and reflect (in this very letter to Gavin Hamilton) that he 'd never 'meet so delicious an armful again.'

In the long-run his magnanimity suffered a certain change. The peasant at work scarce ever goes wrong; but abroad and idle, he is easily spoiled, and soon. Edinburgh was a triumph for Burns; but it was also a misfortune. It was a centre of conviviality—a city of clubs and talk and good-fellowship, a city of harlotry and high jinks, a city (above all) of drink:—

‘Whare conthy chiel at e'enin meet,
Their bizzin craigs and mou's to weet:
An' blythely gar auld Care gae by Wi' blinket and wi' bleering eye’:—

a dangerous place for a peasant to be at large in, especially a peasant of the conditions and the stamp of Burns. He was young, he was buckishly given, and he was—Burns. He had, as certain numbers in The Merry Muses witness, an entirely admirable talent of a kind much favoured by our liberal ancestors. To hear him talk was ever a privilege; while to hear him make such use as he might of this peculiar capacity cannot but have constituted an unique experience. After all, a gift—a gift, and a man must use the gifts he has. No reasonable being can question that Burns used this one of his.\(^1\) In those days he could scarce be buckish—or even popular—and do other. Even in the country, says Heron, in his loose yet lofty way, 'the

\(^1\) This is noted neither in praise nor in dispraise. It is noted to show that Burns was essentially a man of his time: as how, peasant of genius that he was, could he be anything else? Our fathers loved sculduddery, and Burns, who came from Carrick—where, as Lockhart has remarked, the Vernacular was spoken with peculiar gaiety and vigour—was the best gifted of them all in this respect by virtue of his genius, his turn of mind, his peasanthood, and his wonderful capacity for talk. Josiah Walker notes of Burns that his conversation was 'not more licentious' than the conversation heard at the tables of the great; Lockhart regrets that he can give but few of Burns's mots, for the reason that the most of those preserved and handed down were unquotable. It was a trick of the time, and long after—(remember Colonel Newcome's indignant retreat before old Costigan)—so that Lord Cork of The Bumper Toast, and Captain Morris at Carlton House, and Burns among the Crochallan Fencibles are but expressions of the same fashion in humour, the same tendency in the human mind to apprehend and rejoice in the farce of sex. I do not know that Burns and M'Queen of Braxfield (Stevenson's Weir of Hermiston) ever met. But it was said of M'Queen that he had never read anything but sculduddery and law; and to Ramsay of Ochtertyre, in whom Sir Walter found some elements of Monkburns, the two men seemed cast in the same mould. Burns, in any case, was a man of the later Eighteenth Century (he sent one of his best-known facetiae to Graham of Fintry, with a view to correcting some illiberal report about his politics); and to take him out of it, and essay to make him a smug, decent, Late-Victorian journalist is, as I think, to essay a task at once discreditable in aim and impossible of execution.
votaries of intemperate joys, with persons to whom he was recommended by licentious wit . . . had begun to fasten on him, and to seduce him to embellish the gross pleasures of their looser hours with the charms of his wit and fancy.' These temptations—(he was known, be it remembered, for the righthand of The Fornicator and The Court of Equity as well as for the poet of the Mountain Daisy and the Saturday Night)—he was by no means incapable of putting by. Mr. Arthur Bruce, indeed, 'a gentleman of great worth and discernment,' assured Heron that he had 'seen the Poet steadily resist such solicitations and allurements to convivial enjoyment, as scarcely any other person could have withstood.' But—thus this author: intelligent, not unfriendly on the whole, on the whole competent—'the bucks of Edinburgh accomplished . . . that in which the boors of Ayrshire had failed. After residing some months in Edinburgh he began to estrange himself, not altogether, but in some measure, from the society of his graver friends. . . . He suffered himself to be surrounded by a race of miserable beings who were proud to tell that they had been in company with Burns, and had seen Burns as loose and as foolish as themselves.' 2 One result of this condescension was this: always the

2 I give all this for what it is worth. Heron himself was something of a wastrel. Yet he had a clerical habit and a clerical bias which made him easily censorious in the case of so hardened and so militant an anti-cleric as the Bard. He was personally acquainted, however, with that hero; and his little biography (1797) is neither unintelligent nor ill-written.
best man in the room, 'the cock of the company,' as Heron puts it, 'he began to contract something of new arrogance in conversation'; till in the long-run 'he could scarcely refrain from indulging in similar freedom and dictatorial decision of talk, even in the presence of persons who could less patiently endure his presumption.' Heron's detail is vague—not to say indefinite; his effect may be misleading. But, as I said, the peasant at large—the peasant without hard work to keep him straight—must, almost of necessity, run to waste. And it is plain that, treading thus closely on the heels of 'the dissipation and riot,' the 'mason-meetings, drinking-matches, and other mischief,' of the year before, the distractions and the triumphs of Edinburgh continued the work which the mistakes and follies of Dumfries were to finish ten years after.

At last, however, the First Edinburgh Edition appeared (21st April 1787). The issue ran to 2800 copies, and 1500 of these were subscribed in advance. What Burns got for it is matter of doubt. Creech informed Heron that it was £1100—which is a plain untruth; Chambers says £500; Burns himself told Mrs. Dunlop (25th March 1789) that he expected to clear some £440 to £450. (Other impressions were called for in the course of the year, but the Bard had sold his copyright, and had no interest in them.) Whatever the amount, Creech

1 Heron himself, no doubt. He 'had the tongues,' and thought himself the better man.

2 At the instancing of Henry Mackenzie, Creech paid Burns (23rd April 1787) a hundred guineas for the copyright of the Poems, besides subscribing five hundred copies. The Caledonian Hunt subscribed another hundred; and Burns sent seventy to was a slow paymaster; and, as Edinburgh was bad for Burns, and Creech was responsible for Burns's detention in Edinburgh, it is impossible not to regret that Burns had not another publisher. Burns in effect, his Second Edition once published, had nothing to do but pocket his receipts,¹ and be gone. This,

Ballantine for 'a proper person' in Ayr, and wrote from Dunse (17th May) to acknowledge the receipt, from Pattison, the Paisley bookseller, of 'Twenty-two pounds, seven shillings sterling, payment in full, after carriage deducted for ninety copies' more. Twenty-four copies went to the Earl and Countess of Glencairn, twenty to Prentice of Conington Mains, forty to Muir of Kilmarnock, twenty-one to Her Grace of Gordon, forty-two to the Earl of Eglintoun, and a certain number to the Scots Benedictionaries at Maryborough and Ratisbon, and the Scots Colleges at Douay, Paris, and Valladolid. The subscription price was five, the price to non-subscribers six, shillings: the extra shilling being (Burns to Pattison, ut sup.) 'Creech's profit.'

¹ Heron 'had reason to believe that he had consumed a much larger proportion of these gains than prudence could approve; while he superintended the impression, paid his court to his patrons, and wasted the full payment of the subscription money.' In effect, it is hard to see how, coming to Edinburgh with next to nothing in his pocket (the £20 from Wilson could not have gone very far), he could otherwise have lived. It would have been natural enough for him to have accepted gratuities, for the Age of Patronage was still afoot, and relief in this kind would have come as easily (to say the least) to the 'ploughing poet,' howbeit he was the proudest and in some respects the most punctilious of men, as to any other. I find it hard to believe that there were none. But there is no record of any; and a letter (unpublished) of this period in acknowledgment of a gift of money from Mrs. Dunlop is almost painful in its embarrassment of gratitude and discomfort. On the whole, I take it that, however cheaply he lived in Edinburgh, he must of necessity have had to discount his profits, though not to anything like the extent suggested by Heron. Moreover, it is like enough that he spent a certain amount upon his Tours, and it is certain that Mossgiel was a dead loss to him.
however, was what Creech could not let him do: so that he went and came, and came and went, and it was not until the March of 1789 that the two men squared accounts.1

The Edition floated, comes a jaunt to the Border (begun 5th May) with Robert Ainslie. Then, by the 9th June, Burns is back at Mauchline, a much richer and a vastly more important person than he left it: able to lend his brother £180; reconciled, too, with Jean and her people, but disgusted, or feigning himself disgusted (for, after the repudiation, he is ever the superior and the injured party in regard to Jean), with the ‘mean, servile compliance’ with which his advances are met. Follows a tour to the West Highlands, which seems to be largely an occasion for drink and talk; and in July you find him back at Mauchline, boasting how he, ‘an old hawk at the sport,’ has brought ‘a certain lady from her aerial towerings, pop, down at my foot, like Corporal Trim’s hat’—which means that Jean is presently with child by him for the second time. In August he is at Edinburgh, intent on a settlement with Creech, but on the 25th he starts for the Highland tour with his friend Nicol.2 After a couple of excursions more—

1 Of the work he did about this time the best is to be found in the Haggis and the Epistles to Creech and the Guidwife of Wauchope House. What is very much more to the purpose is that he made Johnson’s acquaintance, and at once began contributing to the Musical Museum.

2 Heron describes Nicol as a man who ‘in vigour of intellect, and in wild yet generous impetuosity of passion, remarkably resembled . . . Burns’; who ‘by the most unwearied and extraordinary professional toil, in the midst of as persevering dissipa-one to Ayrshire, to look at certain holdings—he is resolved on quitting Edinburgh, settlement or no settlement, to farm or go to the Indies, as circumstances shall dictate. But it is written that his life shall have another disputable episode and the world an immortal scrap of song:

‘Had we never lov’d sae kindly,
Had we never lov’d sae blindly,
Never met—or never parted—
We had ne’er been broken-hearted.’

So in the beginning of December he falls in with Mrs. M’Lehose; he instantly proposes to ‘cultivate her friendship with the enthusiasm of religion’; and the two are languishing in Arcady in the twinkling of a cupid’s wing.

She was a handsome, womanly creature—‘of a somewhat voluptuous style of beauty’; a style the Bard appreciated—lively but devout, extremely sentimental yet inexorably dutiful: a grass widow with children—nine times in ten a lasting safeguard—and the strictest notions of propriety—a good enough defence for a time; but young (she was the Bard’s own age), clever, ‘of a poetical fabric of mind,’ and all the rest. The upsetting of a hackney coach disabled Burns from calling on her for some weeks. But he wrote her letters, and she answered them; and he was Sylvander, and she signed herself Clarinda; and they addressed each other in verse as well as prose; and she said it could never be; and he said that at least he must know her heart was his; and Religion was her ‘balm in every woe’; and he gave her his ideas of Deity; and, when they could meet, Clarinda was ever afraid lest she had let Sylvander go too far; and Sylvander, for his part, was monstrous eloquent about ‘Almighty Love’—(he was sometimes dreadfully like his favourite Man of Feeling) —and was ‘ready to hang himself’ about ‘a young Edinburgh widow.’ Widow she was not; but her husband, who cared not a snap of the fingers for her, was away in the West Indies; and it may perhaps have suited her lover—who never, so far as is known, was trained to the compromises and the obsequiencies of adultery—to soothe his conscience by making believe that the affair was at the most a simple everyday amour. Clarinda was of another make. In the prime of life, deserted, sentimental, a tangle of simple instincts and as simple pieties, she had the natural woman’s desire for a lover and the religious woman’s resolve to keep that lover’s passion within bounds. It is scarce questioned that she succeeded: though there is a legend that a certain gallant and insinuating little lyric:—

VOL. IV.
'O May, thy morn was ne'er sae sweet
   As the mirk night o' December!
For sparkling was the rosy wine,
   And private was the chamber,
And dear was she I dare na name
   But I will ay remember'.

commemorates, not only their final meeting (December 6th, 1791), but also, the triumph of the Bard.\(^1\) In any event she was plainly an excellent creature, bent on keeping herself honest and her lover straight; and it is impossible to read her letters to Sylvander without a respect, a certain admiration even, which have never been awakened yet by the study of Sylvander's letters to her. For Sylvander's point of view, as M'Lehose was still alive, and an open intrigue with a married woman would have been ruin, only one inference is possible: that he longed for the shepherd's hour to strike for the chime's sake only; so that, when he thought of his future, as he must have done anxiously and often, he cannot ever have thought

\(^1\) Both Ae Fond Kiss and O May, thy Morn were sent to Clarinda after the final parting; but the legend is all-too obviously an effect of the very common human sentiment in deference to which so many novels end happily. For the rest, Sir Walter Scott wrote thus on the fly-leaf of a copy of the very scarce Belfast Edition (1806) of the Letters Addressed to Clarinda by Robert Burns, now at Abbotsford:—'Clarinda was a Mrs. Meiklehose, wife of a person in the West Indies, from whom she lived separate but without any blemish, I believe, on her reputation. I don't wonder that the Bard changed her "thrice unhappy name" for the classical sound of Clarinda. She was a relative of my friend the late Lord Craig, at whose house I have seen her, old, charmless and devote. There was no scandal attached to her philandering with the Bard, though the Lady ran risques, for Burns was anything but platonic in his amours,' etc.
of it as Clarinda's, even though in a moment of peculiar exaltation he swore to keep single till that wretch, the wicked husband, died.¹

Very early in 1788, Jean Armour—brought some time in the preceding summer 'pop, down at my feet, like Corporal Trim's hat'—was expelled her parents' house and took refuge at Tarbolton Mill. There Burns found her on his return, and thence he removed her to a house in 'Mauchline toun,' to the particular joy, a short while after, of Saunders Tait:—

'The wives they up their coats did kilt,
And through the streets so clean did stilt,
Some at the door fell wi' a pelt
Maist broke their leg,
To see the Hen, poor wanton jilt!
Lay her fourth egg.'²

Follows what is perhaps the most perplexing sequence of circumstances in a perplexing life. To Clarinda, who knew of the affair with Armour, pitied

² Some stanzas later in B—rus's Hen Clockin in Mauchline, Saunders (who has been likening Jean to a ship) thus notes her state:—

'Now she is sailing in the Downs,
Calls at the ports of finest towns,
To buy bed hangings and galloons':

and comments with fury on the fact that she 's got, not only 'twa packs o' human leather,' but also

'A fine cap and peacock feather,
And wi't she 's douce,
With a grand besom made of heather,
To sweep her house.'

It is worth noting that he winds up his lampoon by accusing the gossips at the lying-in of talking scandal of the rankest and reading The Holy Fair!
the victim—(this does not mean that she wished her married to Burns)—and had sped her shepherd on his homeward way with 'twa wee sarkies' for the victim's little boy: a mistress, be it remembered, to whom he had written (14th February) in such terms as these:—'I admire you, I love you as a woman beyond any one in the circle of creation': —he wrote, a few days after his arrival at Mauchline, that he had 'this morning' (23rd February 1788) 'called for a certain woman,' and been 'disgusted with her,' so that he could not 'endure her.' Though his heart 'smote him for the profanity,' he sought to compare the two; and 'twas setting the expiring glimmer of a farthing taper beside the cloudless glory of the meridian sun.' 'Here,' the Old Hawk continues, 'here was tasteless insipidity, vulgarity of soul, and mercenary fawning. There, polished good sense, Heaven-born genius, and the most generous, the most delicate, the most tender passion.' This to the contrary, it needs no great knowledge of life, and still less of Burns and Armour, to divine what happened; and it needs as little of Burns at this point in his career to see why he ended his confession to Clarinda thus:—'I have done with her, and she with me.' Eight days after this (3rd March 1788), in a letter to Ainslie, some parts of it too 'curious' for a Victorian page, he tells a different story.1 'Jean,' says he,

1 The letter is best described as a Crochallanism—as something written by one Fencible for the edification of another Fencible, and dealing with its subject in right Fencible style and from the correct Fencible point of view. I am afraid that, like the afore-said letter to Clarinda, it was designed as what Ainslie himself, then unregenerate, might have called 'a d—d bite.'
‘I found banished like a martyr—forlorn, destitute, and friendless; all for the good old cause. I have reconciled her to her fate: I have reconciled her to her mother:1 I have taken her a room: I have taken her to my arms: I have given her a mahogany bed: I have given her a guinea; and I have’—but here Scott Douglas’s garbling begins, and Burns’s inditing ends; and the original must be read, or the reader will never wholly understand what manner of man the writer was. Then comes an avowal so disconcerting that I cannot choose but disbelieve it, and conclude that it was made for some special purpose. ‘But,’ says the Old Hawk, ‘but, as I always am, on every occasion—I have been prudent and cautious to an astounding degree; I swore her, privately and solemnly, never to attempt any claim on me as a husband, even though anybody should persuade her she had such a claim, which she had not,2 neither during my life nor after my death. She did all this like a good girl, and . . .’ The rest is unquotable. At first consideration, the spectacle of the Bard keeping ‘the wish’d, the trysted hour,’ with a settled purpose of ‘prudence and caution’ in his mind, and as it were the materials for swearing in his pocket, in nowise makes for enlightenment. On reflection, however, it becomes evident that Burns wrote thus to Ainslie, whom he had asked to call on Clarinda in his absence, simply that Ainslie might quote her his report of a second (and an entirely superfluous) act of

1 Was reconciliation possible without a second offer of marriage? I doubt it.

2 This is literally true: the ‘unlucky paper’ was destroyed.
repudiation on Jean’s part:¹ to the end, as I cannot doubt, of using the fact for all it was worth, when he himself appeared upon the scene. That this is at least a possible theory is shown by the terms in which he tells (7th March) the story of his reconciliation to Brown:²—‘I found Jean with her cargo very well laid in. . . . I have turned her into a convenient harbour where she may lie snug till she unload, and have taken the command myself, not ostensibly, but for a time in secret.’ This can only mean that he purposes to marry the girl. For all that, though, he still has hopes of a practical issue to his Edinburgh affair; for in his next letter (writ the same day) to Clarinda, who has reproached him for silence, and at the same time owned that she counts ‘all things (Heaven excepted) but lost, that I may win and keep you,’ ‘Was it not blasphemy, then,’ he asks, ‘against your own charms and against my feelings, to suppose that a short fortnight could abate my passion!’ With a vast deal more to the same purpose. Three days after, he starts again for Edinburgh, and plunges deeper in desire than ever for his ‘dearest angel’ (so he calls her on the 17th March), the ‘dearest partner of his soul’ (four days after). ‘Oh Clarinda’ (same date), ‘what do I owe to Heaven for blessing me with such

¹ There was no need of oaths from Jean: her lover had had his bachelor’s certificate in his pocket for months. And such swearing as there was—was it not all on the other side?

² It is important to note the difference in manner and tone and suggestion between Burns to Brown and Burns to Ainslie. Burns writes to Brown as friend to friend; to Ainslie as Fencible to Fencible—much, in fact, as Swiveller, President of the Glorious Apollos, to Chuckster, Vice of the same sublime Society.
a piece of exalted excellence as you!' He must leave for Ellisland via Mauchline, on the 24th; and 'Will you open,' he asks, 'with satisfaction and delight a letter'—('twas all to be limited to letters soon)—'from a man who loves, who has loved you, and who will love you to death, through death, and for ever!' They are to meet the next night, and he is to watch—(right Arcady, this!)—her lighted window:—'Tis the star that guides me to Paradise.' And for him 'the great relish to all is—that Honor—that Innocence—that Religion, are the witnesses and guarantees of our happiness.' Follows a bit of the Bible adapted to their peculiar case; and with an 'Adieu, Clarinda! I am going to remember you in my prayers,' the Old Hawk stoops to his perch for the night. Nothing is known of the last engagement; but apparently the citadel remains inviolate, for the leaguer is raised next day, and the besieger draws off his forces by way of Glasgow. Thence he writes to Brown (26th March) that 'these eight days' he has been 'positively crazed.' And by the 7th April he has made Jean Armour his wife.

An amazing love-story? True. But that love-story it was—that Burns was first and last enamoured of the woman he made his wife—is shown, I think, by the fact that to all intents and purposes he married her twice over. As for Clarinda, well ... ! Clarinda complicates and exhilarates the interest to this extent at least: that if words mean anything, and the Bard be judged by those he wrote, the Bard, had Clarinda been indeed a widow, might at a given moment have found himself incapable of making Jean an honest woman. And had he followed his fancy, not his heart? How had the two Arcadians fared? 'Tis for some future Chambers to divine and say.

Meanwhile he had taken Ellisland, a farm in Dumfriesshire, of Miller of Dalswinton: with an allowance from his landlord, a worthy and generous man, of £300, for a new stead ing and outhouses. His marriage at last made formal and public (it seems to have been celebrated by Gavin Hamilton), on the 5th August 1788 the bride and bridegroom appeared before the Session, acknowledged its irregularity, demanded its 'solemn confirmation,' were sentenced to be rebuked, were 'solemnly engaged to adhere faithfully to one another as husband and wife all the days of their life,' and were finally 'absolved from any scandal' on the old account. But the new stead ing was long a-building. It was not till the 6th November that Burns and Jean set up their rest in Dumfriesshire; and even so, they had to go, not to their own farmhouse—(it was not ready for them till the August of 1789)—but, to a place called 'The Isle,' about a mile away from it. Burns had taken Ellisland on the advice of a friendly expert;¹

¹ 'A lease was granted to the poetical farmer' (thus Heron, who knew the country) 'at the annual rent which his own friends declared that the due cultivation of his farm might easily enable him to pay.' But those friends, being Ayrshiremen, 'were little acquainted with the soil, with the manures, with the markets, with the dairies, with the modes of improvement in Dumfriesshire'; they had estimated his rental at Ayrshire rates; so that, 'contrary to his landlord's intention,' he must pay more for Ellisland than Ellisland was worth. According to the elder Cunningham, Ellisland was a poet's choice, not a farmer's.
but he had had his doubts about the wisdom of ‘guid auld Glen’s’ decision, and these were soon justified. For a time, however, he stuck to his work like a man: conversing much, it would seem, in his leisure with his neighbour, Glenriddell, and others, whose honoured guest he was, making and vamping songs, paying some heed to national and local politics, and finding time for letters not a few—among them a long and elaborate criticism on some worthless verses by that crazy creature, Helen Maria Williams.¹ But by the end of July 1789 he had resolved to turn his holding into a dairy farm to be run by Jean and his sisters, and to take up his gaugership ² in earnest; and on the 10th of August, some brief while after the completion of The Kirk’s Alarm, he learned from Graham of Fintry (whom he had met, in 1787, at the Duke of Athole’s, on his Second Highland Tour) that he was appointed Exciseman for that district of Dumfriesshire in which Ellisland is situate. The work was hard, for he had charge of ten parishes, and must ride two hundred miles a week to get his duty

² By Glencairn’s interest he had been appointed to a place in the Excise as early as 1787.
done. But by the beginning of December, 'I have found,' he writes, 'the Excise business go a great deal smoother with me than I expected'; and that he 'sometimes met the Muses,' as he jogged through the Nithsdale hills, is shown by the fact that The Whistle, the excellent verses on Captain Grose (with whom he made acquaintance at Glenriddell's table), and Thou Ling'ring Star, with Willie Brew'd, that best of drinking-songs, and The Five Carlins (a notable piece of mimicry, if no more), all belong to the period of his probation, and were all written before the end of the year. Plainly, too, he was an officer at once humane and vigilant: since, while it is told of him that he could always wink when staring would mean blank ruin to some old unchartered alewife (say), his first year's 'decret'—his share, that is, of the fines imposed upon his information—was worth some fifty or sixty pounds. Exercise and the open air are held good for a man's health; yet in the winter of 1789–90 this man suffered cruelly from his old ailment. As for verse, the Elegy on Matthew Henderson and Tarn o' Shanter (1790) seem a poor year's output for the poet of those wonderful months at Mossgiel. But work for Johnson was going steadily on; so that the results of these barren-looking times are in a sort the best known of his titles to greatness and to fame. Thus he strove, and faltered, and achieved till 1791, by the beginning of which year he had realised that Ellisland was impossible; that he could not afford his rent, which (so he told Mrs. Dunlop) was raised that year by £20, and must depend entirely on his Excisemanship: when he asked for service in a port, and, by Mrs. Dunlop's interest, was transferred to 'a vacant side-walk' in Dumfries town. Thither, his landlord setting no manner of impediment in his way, and his crops and gear having been well and profitably sold,\(^1\) he removed himself in December, and established his family in a little house in the Wee Vennel.

'Tis a circumstance to note that, beginning at Ellisland as the Burns of Of A' the Airts, some time before the end he was the Burns of *Yestreen
I Had a Pint o' Wine*.\(^2\) That is, he married Jean in the April of 1788, and some two years after he got Anne Park with child. Jean bore him his second son (in wedlock) the 9th April 1791; and Anne Park had been delivered of a daughter by him ten days before (31st March). Some say that she died in childbed; some that she lived to marry a soldier. Nobody knows, and, apparently, obody cares, what became of her. *She was no

\(^1\) The standing crops were 'rouped' in the last week of August.
They realised 'a guinea an acre above the average.' But such a riot of drunkenness was 'hardly ever seen in this country.'
See Burns to Sloan (Scott Douglas, v. 394) for details and for a confession:—'You will easily guess how I enjoyed the scene; as you back to the Burns of The Jolly Beggars. The stock and gear 'were not sold till August' (Scott Douglas, v. 392). 'We did not come empty-handed to Dumfries,' Mrs. Burns told M'Diarmid. 'The Ellisland sale was a very good one. A cow in her first calf brought eighteen guineas, and the purchaser never rued his bargain. Two other cows brought good prices.

They had been presented by Mrs. Dunlop of Dunlop.'

\(^2\) I have read somewhere that the first quatrain—the flower of the song—is old; but I cannot verify the description.
‘passion flower’; and though the Bard himself thought the ditty he made upon her one of his best, the ‘Episode’ in which she played a principal part is not regarded with any special interest by his biographers. She was a tavern waitress, and he was the Bard; and she pleased him; and she lived, or died—it matters not which; and there’s an end on’t. The true interest consists, perhaps, in the magnanimity of Jean, who, lying-in a few days after the interloper, was somehow moved to receive the interloper’s child, and to suckle it with her own. It is further to note that Anne Park is the last of Burns’s mistresses who has a name. That she was not the last in fact you gather from Currie; but this one is innominate. So far as is

1 Chambers declares that, if Jean had not been away in Ayrshire, there would have been no Elizabeth Burns: which is surely the boldest apology for a husband’s lapse, at the same time that it is the frankest admission of this particular husband’s inability to cleave to his wife in absence, that has ever been offered to an admiring world. Scott Douglas knocks it on the head, and shows that Chambers’s valour is greater than Chambers’s sense of history, by proving that neither in the June nor the July of 1790 could Jean have been away.

2 He has been roundly and deservedly reproved for the manner and the circumstances in which he published his report—(of an ‘accidental complaint’)—which, by the way, was started by Heron. For another piece of scandal, whether published or not I do not know—that at Dumfries the Bard talked openly with harlots—it is, of course, entirely unauthenticated; and I here refer to it but for the purpose of pointing out that, if it were true, the fact of such familiarities, however horrifying to respectable Dumfries, would sit lightly enough both on Burns the peasant and on Burns the poet of The Jolly Beggars and My Auntie Jean Held to the Shore: that, if it were true, the memory of Burns exchanging terms with the light-heels of the port were simply one to set beside the memory of Burton rejoicing in the watermen at the bridge-foot at Oxford.
known, the goddesses of the years to come, the Chlorises and Marias and Jessies:—

"'Tis sweeter for the despairing

are all platonic in practice, if not in idea. The recipe for song-making was soon to be this:—‘I put myself in the regimen of adoring a fine woman, and in proportion to the adorability of her charms, in proportion you’—Thomson—‘are delighted with my verses.’ It was a mistake, so far as the world is concerned. But Burns made it; and by the time it was made, he probably knew no better. In his last years, indeed, the irresponsible Faunus of Mossgiel and Edinburgh becomes a kind of sentimental sultan, who changes, or rewards, his slaves of dream with a magnificence which, edifying or not, is at least amusing. Thus, you find him designing the publication of a book of songs, with portraits of the beauties by whom they are inspired; Maria Riddell is expelled his lyrical harem as with a fork, because she has offended him; Jean Lorimer, she of ‘the lint-white locks,’—(‘Bonie lassie, artless lassie!’)—is the Chloris of ditty after ditty, till of a sudden Chloris is a disgusting name, and ‘what you once mentioned of “flaxen locks” is just’—so just, indeed, that ‘they cannot enter into an elegant description of beauty.’

1 Is it not all the Peasant and his womankind? The peasant’s women are his equals. The sentiment of chivalry is not included in his heritage; and he treats his associates in that lot of penury and toil which is his birthright as the ‘predominant partner,’ the breadwinner, the provider of children, may: he of 1796, in the July of which year he dies. And he keeps up his trick of throwing the lyric handkerchief till the end. All through his last illness he is tenderly solicitous about his wife, be it remembered; yet the deathbed songs for Jessie Lewars are the best of those closing years.

In the result, then, Ellisland was a mistake: not so much because it was a farm, as because it was not Burns's own.¹ He was essentially and unalterably a peasant; and as a peasant-poet, a crofter taking down the best verses ever dictated by the Vernacular Muse, he might, one would like to think, what with work in the fields, and work at his desk, and the strong, persuasive inducements of home, have attained to length of days and peace of mind and the achievement of still greater fame, at the same time that he realised the ideal which he has sublimated in some famous lines:—

'To mak' a happy fireside clime
For weans and wife,
That's the true pathos and sublime
Of human life.'

Plainly, though, it could not be. He had too much genius, too much temperament, for it to be: with too much interest in life, which to him, however diverse and however variable his moods, meant, punishes, that is, and he rewards. It is unlikely that this was Burns's practice with Jean; but assuredly it was his practice with the 'fine women' of his dreams.

largely, if not wholly, Wine and Woman and Song. Also, he had been too hardly used, too desperately driven in his youth, and too splendidly petted and pampered in his manhood, to endure with constancy the work by which the tenant-farmer has to earn his bread. He had seen his father fail at Mount Oliphant and Lochlie; and he had shared his brother's failure at Mossgiel. By no fault of his own, but owing to the circumstance that he had taken a holding out of which he could not make his rent, he failed himself at Ellisland; and though, in his case, there was small risk of 'a factor's snash,' he was infinitely too honest and too proud to take undue advantage of another man's bounty: so, to make ends meet, he turned gauger, and took charge of ten parishes, and rode two hundred miles a week in all weathers. It was a thing he'd always wanted to do, and, at the time he took to doing it, it was the only thing that could profitably be done by him. But his misfortune in having to do it was none the less for that. It took him from his home, it unsettled his better habits, it threw him back on Edinburgh and his triumphant experience as an idler and a Bard, it led him into temptation by divers ways. And when Pan, his goat-foot father—Pan, whom he featured so closely, in his great gift of merriment, his joy in life, his puissant appetites, his innate and never-failing humanity—would whistle on him from the thicket, he could not often stop his ears to the call. He was the most brilliant and the most popular figure in the district; he loved good-fellowship; he needed applause; he rejoiced in the proof of his own pre-eminence in talk—rejoiced, too, in the transcendentalising effect of liquor upon the talker, as in the positive result of his name and fame, his "prestance" and his personality, upon adoring women. Is it not plain that Dumfries was inevitable? Or, rather, is it not plain that, first and last, the life was one logical, irrefragable sequence of preparations for the death? That Mount Oliphant and Lochlie led irresistibly to Mauchline, as Mauchline to Edinburgh, and Edinburgh to Ellisland, and Ellisland to the house in the Mill Vennel? And is not the lesson of it all that there is none so unfortunate as the misplaced Titan—the man too great for his circumstances? Speaking broadly, I can call none to mind who, in strength and genius and temperament, presents so close a general likeness to Burns as Mirabeau. Born a noble, and given an opportunity commensurate with himself, Burns would certainly have done such work as Mirabeau's, and done it at least as well. Born a Scots peasant, Mirabeau must, as certainly, have lived the life and died the death of Burns. In truth, it is only the fortune of war that we remember the one by his conduct of the Revolution, which called his highest capacities into action, while we turn to the other for his verses, which are the outcome (so Maria Riddell thought, and was not alone in thinking) of by no means his strongest gift.

1 He complained (to Clarinda) long ere this of the 'savage hospitality' he could not choose but accept. And, in effect, he had the ill-luck to start drinking at a time when whisky, freshly new from the Highlands, was the fashionable tipple, and was fast superseding ale. Born a generation earlier, when ale and claret were the staple comforters, he had stood a better chance.
Whatever the sequel, it may fairly be said for Ellisland that Burns and Jean were happy there, and that it saw the birth of Tam o' Shanter and the perfecting, in the contributions to Johnson's Museum, of the Vernacular Song.\(^1\) The last, as we know, was Burns's work; but he had assistants, and they did him yeoman service. He worked in song exactly as he worked in satire and the rest—on familiar, old-established bases; but he did so to a very much greater extent than in satire and the rest, and with a great deal more of help and inspiration from without. I have said that he contributed nothing to Vernacular Poetry except himself, but, his contribution apart, was purely Scots-Traditional; and this is especially true of his treatment of the Vernacular Song. What he found ready to his hand was, in brief, his country's lyric life. Scotland had had singers before him; and they, nameless now and forgotten save as factors in the sum of his achievement, had sung of life and the experiences of life, the tragedy of death and defeat, the farce and the romance of sex, the rapture and the fun of \(^1\) I say nothing of the numbers sent to Thomson. Very many are copied from the Museum, and the others need not here he discussed with even an approach to particularity. A point to note in connexion with the contributions both to the Museum and to Scottish Airs is that Burns was honourably and intensely proud of them. He regarded them as work done in the service of the Scotland whose 'own inspirèd Bard' he was, and neither asked money, nor would take it, for them. To think that he was writing for Thomson to the very end is to have at least one pleasant memory of Dumfries.

battle and drink, with sincerity always, and often, very often, with rich or rich-rank humour. Among them they had observed and realised a little world of circumstance and character; among them they had developed the folk-song, had fixed its type, had cast it into the rhythms which best fitted its aspirations, had equipped it with all manner of situations and refrains, and, above all, had possessed it of a great number of true and taking lyrical ideas. Any one who has tried to write a song will agree with me, when I say that a lyrical idea—by which I mean a rhythm, a burden, and a drift—once found, the song writes itself. It writes itself easily or with difficulty, it writes itself well or ill; but in the end it writes itself. In this matter of lyrical ideas Burns was fortunate beyond any of Apollo’s sons. He had no need to quest for them: there they lay ready to his hand, and he had but to work his will with them. That they were there explains the wonderful variety of his humours, his effects, and his themes: that he could live and work up to so many among them is proof positive and enduring of the apprehensiveness of his humanity, his gift of right, far-ranging sympathy. It is certain that, had he not been, they had long since passed out of practical life into the Chelsea Hospital of some antiquarian publication. But it is also certain that, had they not been there for him to take and despoil and use, he would not have been—he could not have been—the master-lyrist we know. What he found was of quite extraordinary worth to him; what he added was himself, and his addition made the life of his find perennial. But, much as are the touch of genius and the stamp of art, they are not everything. The best of many nameless singers lives in Burns's songs; but that Burns lives so intense a lyric life is largely due to the fact that he took to himself, and made his own, the lyrical experience, the lyrical longing, the lyrical invention, the lyrical possibilities of many nameless singers. He was the last and the greatest of them all; but he could not have been the greatest by so very much as he seems, had these innominares not been, nor could his songs have been so far-wandered as they are, nor so long-lived as they must be, had these innominares not lived their lyric life before him. In other terms, the atmosphere, the style, the tone, the realistic method and design, with much of the material and the humanity, of Burns's songs are inherited. Again and again his forefathers find him in lyrical ideas, in whose absence there must certainly—there cannot but have been—

1 As I have said (see ante, pp. 278–9, Note 1), realism is the distinguishing note of the Vernacular School; and the folk-singers are not less curious in detail than their literary associates and forebears. Even that long sob of pain, O, Waly, Waly, has its elements of everyday life circumstance:

'My love was clad in the black velvet,
And I myself in cramasie':—

its references to St. Anton's Well and Arthur's Seat and the sheets that 'sall ne'er be pressed by me.' Cf., too, that wonderful little achievement in romance, The Twa Corbies:

'Ye'll sit on his white hause-bane,
And I'll pyke out his bonie blue e'en,
Wi' ae lock o' his gowden hair
We'll theek our nest when it grows bare.'

Cf., too, in other styles, Toddlin Hame and Ellibanks and Ellibraes and—well, any folk-song you care to try!
a blank in his work. They are his best models, and he does not always surpass them, as he is sometimes not even their equal. And if his effect along certain lines and in certain specified directions he so intense and enduring as it is, the reason is that they are a hundred strong behind him, and that he has selected from each and all of them that which was lyrical and incorruptible. A peasant like themselves, he knew them as none else could ever know. He sympathised from within with their ambitions, their fancies, their ideals, their derisions, even as he was master, and something more, of their methods. And, while it is fair to say that what is best in them is sublimated and glorified by him, it is also fair to say that, but for them, he could never have approved himself the most exquisite artist in folk-song the world has ever seen.

It has been complained that, thus much of his claim to be original removed, he must henceforth shine in the lyrical heaven with a certain loss of magnitude and his splendour something dimmed. And this is so far true that the Burns of fact differs, and differs considerably and at many points, from

1 Cf. O, Waly, Waly and The Twa Corbies and Helen of Kirkconnel; with Toddin Hame, which Burns thought 'the first bottle-song in the world,' the old sets of A Cock-Laird Fu' Cadgie and Fee Him, Father, and, in yet another genre, 0, Were My Love. Even in The Merry Muses Burns, who wrote a particular class of song with admirable gust and spirit, does no better work than some of the innominate—the poets of Erroch Brae and Johnie Scott and Jenny M'Craw, for example; while his redaction of Ellibanks and Ellibraes—('an old free-spoken song which celebrates this locality would be enough in itself to bring the poet twenty miles out of his way to see it')—is in nowise superior to the original.
the Burns of legend. The one is an effect of certain long-lived, inexorable causes; the other—that ‘formidable rival of the Almighty,’ who, deriving from nobody, and appearing from nowhere, does in ten years the work of half-a-dozen centuries—is an impossible superstition, as it were a Scottish Mumbo-Jumbo. The one comes, naturally and inevitably, at the time appointed, to an appointed end; but by no conceivable operation in the accomplishing of human destiny could the other have so much as begun to be. And, after all, however poignant the regret, and however wide-eyed and resentful the amazement of those who esteem a man’s work on the same terms as they would a spider’s, and value it in proportion as it does, or does not, come out of his own belly, enough remains to Burns to keep him easily first in the first flight of singers in the Vernacular, and to secure him, outside the Vernacular, the fame of an unique artist. I have said that, as I believe, his genius was at once imitative and emulous; and, so far as the Vernacular Song is concerned, to turn the pages of our Third Volume is to see that, speaking broadly, his function was not origination but treatment, and that in treatment it is that the finer qualities of his endowment are best expressed and displayed. His measures are high-handed enough; but they are mostly justified.\textsuperscript{1} He never boggles at appropriation,\textsuperscript{2}

\textsuperscript{1} Not always. See Vol. iii. (p. 96 and Note) for an attempt to improve upon Ayton (or another), and ante (p. 42 and Note) for another to improve upon Carew. Both are failures; but only one is in the Vernacular, and neither owns a Vernacular original.

\textsuperscript{2} Besides the folk-singers and the nameless lyrists of the song-books, he is found pilfering from Sedley, Garrick, Lloyd,
so that some of his songs are the oddest conceivable mixture of Burns, Burns’s original, and somebody Burns has pillaged. Take, for instance, that arch and fresh and charming thing, For the Sake of Somebody. In the first place, ‘Somebody’ comes to Burns as a Jacobite catchword; and in the next, the lyrical idea is found in a poor enough botch by Allan Ramsay:

‘For the sake of Somebody,
For the sake of Somebody,
I could wake a winter’s night
For the sake of Somebody.’

This is pretty certainly older than The Tea-Table Miscellany, and has nothing whatever to do with the verses which the elder minstrel has tagged it withal. But it is a right lyrical idea, and in the long-run a lyrical idea is a song. So thinks Burns; and you have but to compare the two sets to see the difference between master and journeyman at a glance. The old, squalid, huckstering little comedy of courtship:

‘First we’ll buckle, then we’ll tell,
Let her flyte and syne come to . . .
I’ll slip hame and wash my feet,
An’ steal on linens fair and clean,
Syne at the trysting place we’ll meet,
To do but what my dame has done’:

Ramsay, Fergusson, Theobald, Carew, Mayne, Dodsley, and Sir Robert Ayton (or another). See also our Notes (Vol. iii.) on Duncan Davison, on Landlady, Count the Lawrin, on Sweetest May, on The Winter it is Past, on We’re A’ Noddin, to name but these; and, as a further illustration of his method, note that, according to Scott Douglas (ms. annotation), the first three lines of Gat Ye Me belong to old song No. 1, the next five to Burns, and the last eight to old song No. 11.
ROBERT BURNS

gives place to a thing to-day as comfortable to the ear and as telling to the heart as when Burns vamped it from Ramsay's vamp from somebody unknown. What is further to note is that not all the latest vamp is Burns plus Ramsay plus Innominate I. plus Jacobite catchword: inasmuch as the first line of Stanza II. is conveyed from an owlish lover in The Tea-Table Miscellany:—

'Ye powers that preside over virtuous love.'

Thus some solemn poetaster a good half-century at least ere Burns; and for over a hundred years 'Ye Powers that smile on virtuous love' has lived as pure Burns, and as pure Burns is now passed into the language. Yet, despite the pilferings and the hints, it were as idle to pretend that Somebody, as it stands, is not Burns, as it were foolish to assert that Burns would have written Somebody without a certain unknown ancestor. Another flash of illustration comes from It Was A' For Our Rightfu' King: with its third stanza lifted clean from Mally Stewart, and set in a jewel of Burnsian gold, especially contrived and chased to set it off and make the lyric best of it. A third example is found in A Red, Red Rose, which, as we have shown (iii. 143 and Note), is a mosaic of rather beggarly scraps of English verse: just as Jonson's peerless Drink To Me Only With Thine Eyes is a mosaic contrived in scraps of conceited Greek prose. It is exquisitely done, of course; but, the beggarly scraps of verse away, could it ever have been done at all? And Auld Lang Syne? It passes for pure Burns; but was the phrase itself—the phrase which by his time had rooted itself in the very vitals of the Vernacular—was the phrase itself, I say, not priceless to him? Something or nothing may be due to Ramsay for his telling demonstration of the way in which it should not be used as a refrain. But what of that older maker and the line which Burns himself thought worth repeating, and which the world rejoices, and will long rejoice, to repeat with Burns:—

‘Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
An’ never thocht upon?’

Is there nothing of his cadence, no taste of his sentiment, no smack of his lyrical idea, no memory (to say the least) of his burden:—

‘On old long syne, my jo,
On old long syne,
That thou canst never once reflect
On old long syne’:

in the later masterpiece? To say ‘No’ were surely to betray criticism. And Ay Waukin, O—should we, could we ever, have had it, had there been nobody but Burns to start the tune and invent the lyrical idea?

‘O, wat, wat,
O, wat and weary!
Sleep I can get nane
For thinkin o’ my dearie.

‘A’ the night I wake,
A’ the day I weary,
Sleep I can get nane
For thinkin o’ my dearie.’

Thus, it may be, some broken man, in hiding among the wet hags; some moss-trooper, drenched and prowling, with a shirtful of sore bones! Whoever he was, and whatever his calling and condition, he had at least one lyrical impulse, he has his part in a masterpiece by Burns, and his part is no small one.

I might multiply examples, and pile Pelion upon Ossa of proof. But to do so were simply to repeat the Bibliographical and the Notes to our Third Volume; and in this place I shall be better employed in pointing out that these double conceptions (so to speak), these achievements in lyrical collaboration, are for the most part the best known and the best liked of Burns’s songs, and are, moreover, those among Burns’s songs which show Burns the song-smith at his finest. The truth is that he wrote two lyric styles: (1) the style of the Eighteenth Century Song-Books,¹ which is a bad one, and in which

¹ He was trained in it from the first. In early youth he carried an English song-book about with him—wore it in his breechespocket, so to speak. This was The Lark: ‘Containing a Collection of above Four Hundred and Seventy Celebrated English and Scotch Songs, None of which are contain’d in the other Collections of the same size, call’d The Syren and The Nightingale. With a Curious and Copious Alphabetical Glossary for Explaining the Scotch words. London. Printed (1746) for John Osborn at the Golden Ball in Pater Noster Row.’ ‘Tis a fat little book, and as multifarious a collection of Restoration and—especially—post-Restoration songs as one could wish to have: antiquated political squibs; ballads, as Chevy Chace, with Gilderoy, the Queen’s Old Soldier, and Katherine Hayes; a number of indecencies from D’Urfey’s Pills; Scots folk-songs, like Toddlin Hame and The Ewe Bughts, and O, Waly, Waly and John Ochiltree and The Blithesome Bridal; current English ditties like Old Sir Simon and Phillida Flouts Me; a song of a Begging Soldier, whose vaunt, ‘With my rags upon my bum,’ is echoed in The Jolly Beggars; much Allan Ramsay; with scattered examples of Dryden, Dorset, Congreve, Alexander Scott, Brome, Prior, Wycherley, Rochester, Farquhar, Cibber—even Skelton; and a
he could be as vulgar, or as frigid, or as tame, as very much smaller men;¹ and (2) the style of the Vernacular Folk-Song, which he handled with that understanding and that mastery of means and ends which stamp the artist. To consider his experiments in the first is to scrape acquaintance with Clarinda, Mistress of My Soul, and Turn Again, Thou Fair Eliza, and On A Bank of Flowers, and Sensibility How Charming, and Castle Gordon, and A Big-Bellied Bottle, and Strathallian’s Lament, and Raving Winds Around Her Blowing, and How Pleasant the Banks, and A Rose-bud, By My Early Walk,² and many a thing besides, which, were it not known for the work wilderness of commonplace ditties about love and drink: on the whole, an interesting collection — particularly if you take it as an element in the education of the lyric Burns.

‘The slave’s spicy forests and gold-bubbling fountains
  The brave Caledonian views wi’ disdain:
  He wanders as free as the winds of his mountains,
  Save Love’s willing fetters—the chains o’ his Jean.’

Such achievements in what Mr. Meredith calls ‘the Bathetic,’ are less infrequent in Burns than could be wished.

² It is understood that Scots Wha Hae is an essay in the Vernacular (I gather, by the way, that it is one of the two or three pieces by ‘the Immortal Exciseman nurtured ayont the Tweed’ which are most popular in England). But, even so, one has but to contrast it with Is There for Honest Poverty, to recognise that in the one the writer’s technical and lyrical mastery is complete, while in the other it is merely academic — academic as the lyrical and technical mastery of (say) Rule Britannia. Now, Is There for Honest Poverty is calqued on a certain disreputable folk-song; while Scots Wha Hae is for all practical purposes the work of an Eighteenth Century Scotsman writing in English, and now and then propitiating the fiery and watchful Genius of Caledonia by spelling a word as it is spelt in the Vernacular.

of a great poet, would long since have gone down into the limbo that gapes for would-be art. In the other are all the little masterpieces by which Burns the lyrist is remembered. He had a lead in The Silver Tassie and in Auld Lang Syne, in A Man’s a Man and Duncan Davison, in A Waukrife Minnie and Duncan Gray and Finlay, in I Hae a Wife and It Was A’ For Our Rightful King and A Red, Red Rose, in Macpherson’s Lament, and Ay Waukin, O, and Somebody, and Whistle an’ I’ll Come to Ye—in all, or very nearly all, the numbers which make his lyrical bequest as it were a little park apart—an unique retreat of rocks and sylvan corners and heathy spaces, with an abundance of wildings, and here and there a hawthorn brake where, to a sound of running water, the Eternal Shepherd tells his tale—in the spacious and smiling demesne of English literature. And my contention—that it is to Burns the artist in folk-song that we must turn for thorough contentment—is proved to the hilt by those lyrics in the Vernacular for which, so far as we know, he found no hint elsewhere, and in which, so far as we know, he expressed himself and none besides. He had no suggestions, it seems (but I should not like to swear), no catchwords, no lyrical material for Tam Glen and Of A’ the Airts, for Willie Brewed and Bonie Doon, for Last May a Braw Wooer and O, Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast,

1 ‘The first four lines are old,’ he says, ‘the rest is mine.’ And, in effect, the quatrain is unique in his work.

2 It is oddly and amusingly illustrative of Burns’s trick of mosaic that a line in this charming song:

‘The brightest jewel in my crown’—
osis bodily from—The Court of Equity!
and Mary Morison—to name no more. But, if they be directly referable to nobody but himself, they feature his whole ancestry. They are folk-songs writ by a peasant of genius, who was a rare and special artist; and they show that the closer he cleaved to folk-models, and the fuller and stronger his possession by the folk-influence, the more of the immortal Burns is there to-day.

Suggested or not, the songs of Burns were devised and written by a peasant, devising and writing for peasants. The emotions they deal withal are the simplest, the most elemental, in the human list, and are figured in a style so vivid and direct as to be classic in its kind. Romance there is none in them, for there was none in Burns—'tis the sole point, perhaps, at which he was out of touch with the unrenowned generations whose flower and crown he was. But of reality, which could best and soonest

1 None, or so little that if his Jacobitisms seem romantic, it is only by contrast with the realities in which they occur. The interest of even It Was A' For Our Rightfu' King is centred in the vampir's sympathy, not with the romantic situation:—

'He turn'd him right and round about
Upon the Irish shore,' etc.:—

but with that living, breathing, palpitating 'actuality' of sentiment developed in both hero and heroine by the disastrous turn of circumstances:—

'Now a' is done that men can do,
And a' is done in vain':—

and the position created by those circumstances at the end:—

'But I hae parted frae my love Never to meet again':—

which places this lyric somewhere near the very top of homely and familiar song.
bring them home to the class in which their genius was developed, and to which themselves were addressed:—

‘Grain de musc qui gît invisible
Au fond de leur éternité’:—

there is enough to keep them sweet while the Vernacular is read. They are for all, or nearly all, the peasant's trades and crafts: so that the gangrel tinker shares them with the spinner at her wheel, the soldier with the ploughman, the weaver with the gardener and the tailor and the herd. Morals, experiences, needs, love and liquor, the rejoicing vigour and unrest of youth, the placid content of age—there is scarce anything he can endure which is not brilliantly, and (above all) sincerely and veraciously, set forth in them. That old-world Scotland, whose last and greatest expression was Burns, either has passed or is fast passing away. In language, manners, morals, ideals, religion, substance, capacity, the theory and practice of life—in all these the country of Burns has changed: in some, has changed 'beyond report, thought, or belief.' But that much of her which was known to her poet is with us still, and is with us in these songs. For man and woman change not, but endure for ever: so that what was truly said a thousand years ago comes home as truth to-day, and will go home as truth when to-day is a thousand years behind. To the making of these things there went the great and generous humanity of Burns, with the humanity, less great but still generous and sincere, of those unknowns, whose namelessness was ever a regret to
They are art in their kind. And there is no reason why this 'little Valclusa fountain' should lack pilgrims, or run dry, for centuries.²

I purpose to deal with the Dumfries period with all possible brevity. The story is a story of decadence; and, even if it were told in detail, would tell us nothing of Burns that we have not already heard or are not all-too well prepared to learn. In a little town, where everybody's known

1 'Are you not quite vexed to think that these men of genius, for such they certainly were, who composed our fine Scottish lyrics, should be unknown? It has given me many a heartache' (R. B. to Thomson, 19th November 1794). And see his Journal for a more heart-felt recognition still.

² They lived not long the limited life of Johnson's Musical Museum and Thomson's Scottish Airs. Thus, in a collection of North of England chap-books (c. 1810-20) which I owe to the kindness of the Earl of Crawford, I find at least two Burns 'Songsters' — (they are the same, but one is called 'The Ayrshire Bard's Songster,' the other something else) — both 'Printed by J. Marshall in the Old Fleshmarket,' Newcastle. In a third — a miscellany, this one—is Scots Wha Hae, 'As sung by Mr. Braham at the Newcastle Theatre Royal' (Carlyle thought this famous lyric should be 'sung by the throat of the whirlwind'; but it had better luck than that). The great Jew tenor further warbled a couple of stanzas of The Winter It is Past at a concert in the same city, when Miss Stephens was responsible for Charlie He's My Darling. In other chaps Burns is found rubbing shoulders with Moore and Campbell and Tom Dibdin, and a hundred others, among them Allan Ramsay. In these Of A' the Airts is sandwiched between The Twopenny Postman and the Wedding at Ballyporeen, while Somebody is kept in countenance by Paddy Carey and The Wounded Hussar. The most popular, perhaps, are Of A' the Airts, and Scots Wha Hae, and Willie Brew'd; but On a Bank of Flowers lacks not admirers, to everybody, there is ever an infinite deal of scandal; and Burns was too reckless and too conspicuous not to become a peculiar cock-shy for the scandalmongers of Dumfries. In a little town, especially if it be a kind of provincial centre, there must of necessity be many people with not much to do besides talking and drinking; and Burns was ever too careless of consequences, as well as ever too resolute to make the most of the fleeting hour—it may be, too, was by this time too princely and too habitual a boon-companion—to refrain from drink and talk when drink and talk were to be had. In the sequel, also, it would seem that that old jealousy of his betters (to use the ancient phrase) had come to be a more disturbing influence than it had ever been before. He knew, none better, that, however brilliantly the poet had succeeded, the man was so far a failure as an investment, that, with bad health and a growing family, he had nothing to look forward to but promotion in the Excise; and his discontent with the practical outcome of his ambition and the working result of his fame was certainly not soothed, and may very well have been exacerbated, by his rather noisy sympathy with the leading principles of the French Revolution. He was too fearless and too proud to dissemble that sympathy, which was presently (1794) to find expression in one of his most vigorous and telling lyrics; he was, perhaps, too powerful a talker not to exaggerate its quality and volume; and, though it was common, in the beginning at least, to many Scotsmen, its expression got him, as was inevitable, into trouble with his superiors, and in the long-run was pretty certainly intensified, to the point at which resentment is translated into terms of indiscretion and imprudence, by the reflection, whether just or not, that it had damaged his chances of promotion. That he fought against temptation is as plain as that he proved incapable of triumph, and that, as Carlyle has wisely and humanely noted, the best for him, certain necessary conditions being impossible, was to die. Syme, who knew and loved him, said that he was 'burnt to a cinder' ere Death took him; we can see for ourselves that the Burns of the Kilmarnock Volume and the good things in the Museum had

1 It seems to have been unjust. Pitt, though he loved the poetry of Burns, did nothing for him—was probably, indeed, too busy to think of doing anything once the page was read and the bottle done; and Fox, to whom Burns looked for advancement, was ever out of office, and could do nothing, even had he been minded to do something, which we are not told that he was. But the Bard had a sure stay in Graham of Fintry; and, though Glencairn was dead, and he was sometimes reprimanded (et pour cause), there is no reason to believe that he would have missed preferment had he lived to be open to it.

2 It has been said, I believe, that Syme's evidence is worthless, inasmuch as it tends to discredit Burns. But one eye-witness, however dull and prejudiced (and Syme was neither one nor other) is worth a wilderness of sentimental historians; and Syme's phrase, howbeit it is so picturesque that it conveys what is, perhaps, too violent an impression, probably means no more than that Burns had damaged himself with drink. That much Burns admitted time and again; and Currie—who cannot but have got his information from Maxwell—remarks that for over a year before the end 'there was an evident decline of our Poet's personal appearance, and, though his appetite continued unimpaired, he was himself sensible that his constitution was sinking.' It was all, the doctor thought, the effect of alcohol on a difficult digestion and a sensitive nervous system; and, though he was something of a fanatic in this matter, I see no reason, as he was also an honest man, to question his diagnosis.
ceased to be some time before the end; there is evidence that some time before the end he was neither a sober companion nor a self-respecting husband. And the reflection is not to be put by, that he left the world at the right moment for himself and for his fame.

There is small doubt that the report of his misconduct was at best unkindly framed; there is none that certain among his apologists have gone a very great deal too far in the opposite direction. We may credit Findlater, for instance, but it is impossible, having any knowledge of the man, to believe in the kind of Exciseman-Saint of Gray: impeccable in all the relations of life and never the worse for liquor: even as it is impossible to believe in the bourgeois Burns of the latest apotheosis. As Lockhart says, the truth lies somewhere between the two extremes; and one is glad to agree with Lockhart. Even so, however, tradition, as reported by friends and enemies alike, runs stronger in his disfavour than it does the other way.¹ And, though we know that party feeling ran high in Dumfries, and that Burns—with his stiff neck, and his notable distinction, and his absolute gift of speech—did certainly damn

himself in the eyes of many by what, in the circumstances, must have seemed a suicidal intemperance of feeling and expression, we know also that, once extremely popular, he was presently cut by Dumfries society; that after a time his reputation was an indifferent one on other counts than politics; and that more than once—as in the case of Mrs. Riddell, and again, when he had to apologise for a toast no reasonable or well-bred man would have proposed in the presence of a King’s officer, unless he were prepared to face the consequences—he behaved himself ill, according to the standard of good manners then and now. The explanation in these and other cases is that he was drunk; and, as matter of fact, drink and disappointment were pretty certainly responsible between them for the mingled squalor and gloom and pathos of the end. There is nothing like liquor to make a strong man vain of his strength and jealous of his prerogative—even while it is stealing both away; and there is nothing like disappointment to confirm such a man in a friendship for liquor. Last of all, there needs but little knowledge of character and life to see that to apologise for Burns is vain: that we must accept him frankly and without reserve for a peasant of genius perverted from his peasanthood, thrust into a place for which his peasanthood and his genius the conduct of the Parliamentary Whigs during the life and long after the death of Pitt. Of all men living Burns was entitled to an opinion; of all men living he had the best gift of expression. Well, he had his opinion, and he used his gift; and Dumfries could not forgive him. It is again a question of circumstances. Fox and the rest were honoured Members of His Majesty’s Opposition. Burns was only an exciseman.

alike unfitted him, denied a perfect opportunity, constrained to live his qualities into defects, and in the long-run beaten by a sterile and unnatural environment. We cannot make him other than he was, and, especially, we cannot make him a man of our own time: a man born tame and civil and unexcessive—'he that died o' Wednesday,' and had obituary notices in local prints. His elements are all-too gross, are all-too vigorous and turbulent for that. 'God have mercy on me,' he once wrote of himself, 'a poor damned, incautious, duped, unfortunate fool! the sport, the miserable victim of rebellious pride, hypochondriac imaginations, agonising sensibility and bedlam passions.' Plainly he knew himself as his apologists have never known him, nor will ever know.

That his intellectual and temperamental endowment was magnificent we know by the way in which he affected his contemporaries, and through the terms in which some of them—Robertson, Heron, Dugald Stewart, and, especially, Maria Riddell—recorded their impression of him; yet we know also that, for all its magnificence, or, as I prefer to think, by reason of its magnificence, it could not save him from defeat and shame. Where was the lesion? What was the secret of his fall? Lord Rosebery, as I think, has hit the white in saying that he was 'great in his strength and great in his weaknesses.'¹ His master-qualities, this critic very justly notes, were 'inspiration and sympathy.' But if I would add 'and character'—which, to be sure, is largely an effect of conditions—how must the commentary run? There is pride—the pride of Lucifer: what did it spare him in the end? There is well-nigh the finest brain conceivable; yet is there a certain curious intolerance of facts which obliges the owner of that brain, being a Government officer and seeing his sole future in promotion, to flaunt a friendship with roaring Jacobins like Maxwell and Syme, and get himself nicknamed a 'Son of Sedition,' and have it reported of him, rightly or not, that he has publicly avowed disloyalty at the local theatre.¹ There is a passionate regard for women; with, as Sir Walter noted, a lack of chivalry which is attested by those lampoons on living Mrs. Riddell and on dead Mrs. Oswald. There is the strongest sense of fatherhood, with the tenderest concern for 'weans and wife'; and there is that resolve for pleasure which not even these uplifting influences can check. There is a noble generosity of heart and temper; but there is so imperfect a sense of conduct, so practical and so habitual a faith in a certain theory:

¹ I do not for an instant forget that here is more circumstance: that he was a true Briton at heart, and that in the beginning his Jacobinism was chiefly, if not solely, an effect of sympathy with a tortured people. But there are ways and ways of favouring an unpopular cause; and Burns's were alike defiant and unwise. Thus Maxwell was practically what most people then called a 'murderer'—of the French King; yet it was while, or soon after, the enormities of the Terror were at their worst, that he became a chief associate of Burns. To some this seems a 'noble imprudence.' Was it not rather pure incontinence of self?
that in the end you have a broken reputation, and death at seven or eight and thirty is the effect of a discrediting variety of causes. Taking the precisian’s point of view, one might describe so extraordinary a blend of differences as a bad, well-meaning man, and one might easily enough defend the description. But the precisian has naught to do at this grave-side; and to most of us now it is history that, while there was an infinite deal of the best sort of good in Burns, the bad in him, being largely compacted of such purely unessential defects as arrogance, petulance, imprudence, and a turn for self-indulgence, this last exasperated by the conditions in which his lot was cast, was not of the worst kind after all. Yet the bad was bad enough to wreck the good. The little foxes were many and active and greedy enough to spoil a world of grapes. The strength was great, but the weaknesses were greater; for time and chance and necessity were ever developing the weaknesses at the same time that they were ever beating down the strength. That is the sole conclusion possible. And to the plea, that the story it rounds is very pitiful, there is this victorious answer:—that the Man had drunk his life to the lees, while the Poet had fulfilled himself to the accomplishing of a peculiar immortality; so that to Burns Death came as a deliverer and a friend.
